The Clerical Brotherhood of the Diocese, at its weekly meeting on Monday morning, November 7, in the Church House, had as its speaker Mr. Stephen A. Haboush, a native of Galilee. Mr. Haboush, who is widely known as a traveler and lecturer, spoke on "A Shepherd of Galilee", giving intimate descriptions of the life of a shepherd boy in the Holy Land today. During his boyhood days Mr. Haboush was a shepherd boy in Galilee, and is coming to Philadelphia within a few weeks to present a travelogue on "The Soul of the Holy Land", under the auspices of the Episcopal Church Students Vestry of the Transfiguration Chapel of the University of Pennsylvania.

Meeting of the Albemarle Convocation.

The Albemarle Convocation held its fall meeting in Scottsville, E. B. Meredith, rector, October 11 and 12. The meeting opened Tuesday evening at the rectory, with an informal discussion of the clergy conference, which had just been held in Richmond, the idea being to interpret that conference in terms of each parishes' needs and responsibilities.

Dr. Kinsey J. Hammond conducted the Quiet Hour Wednesday morning. The essay was read by the Venerable Frederick W. Neve. This was an able presentation of the utility of the Bishops' Crusade.

The meeting closed Wednesday night with an illuminating missionary address by Bishop St. George Tucker, who brought out from both the historical and spiritual standpoint, the organic relationship between missionary activity and the life of the Church.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

Success.

The million dollar campaign for the new St. John's Hospital, which took place in the Diocese of Long Island from the twenty-first to the thirty-first of October, ended on that night with a victory dinner, at which returns were announced, showing that $965,185 had been received in cash and pledges; the remainder was promised by men and women of the organization, and the hospital is now assured. Gifts have come in from the one dollar of a little newsboy, the thirty dollars of a scrubwoman, the sixty dollars of the workmen now digging the foundations, to the hundred thousands of millionaires.

Race, creed and party have been forgotten, all have joined in as Bishop Stires said, to "give Brooklyn a hospital that will immortalize its generosity for generations to come".

The Bishop, who has been the inspiration back of all, termed himself as "the happiest Bishop in the Episcopal Church of America". It has been a time that will never be forgotten in Long Island.

A Munificent Gift.

At the Sunday morning service on November 6, at Grace Church, Brooklyn Heights, the rector, the Rev. George P. Atwater, D. D., made announcement that two members of the parish had offered to the Vestry the sum of $100,000 for the erection of a parish house.

The parish already has a very beautiful church building, but very inadequate parish house facilities.

This gift will make possible a suitable structure, to complete the equipment of the church for its work in this section of the city.

Brooklyn Heights is but three minutes' ride by subway from the downtown section of New York, and because of its convenience and attractiveness as a residence section, many large apartments are being erected there.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Coadjutor.

Consecration of Emmanuel Church, Bel Air.

Emmanuel Church, Bel Air, was consecrated on Sunday, October 9, by the Rt. Rev. Edward T. Helfenstein, Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Maryland. Bishop Helfenstein also confirmed. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Robert A. Castleman, of Falls Church, Virginia, who was rector here when the present Emmanuel Church was built.

Mr. Castleman's sermon made a deep impression. The text was 1 Kings 8: 27 and 28, and the preacher brought out the fact that while we cannot localize the Omnipresent Deity, yet there is a law of Sacred Association. With a wealth of apt illustration he then developed this point and brought the sermon to a feeling climax in the narration of the deep and tender associations which he had with Emmanuel as a former rector.

Concluding, he said: "Let us never forget that it is not the four walls of stone, however imposing, or the inward ornamentation, however beautiful and significant, that chiefly counts; but the lives that make the living stones of the Spiritual temple not made with hands, eternal, in (to) the heavens', the spirit of life and service that dwells within and makes the sacred association."

Bishop Murray Presented Cope.

On Sunday afternoon, October 30, at a special service in Emmanuel Church, Baltimore, the Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, Presiding Bishop of the Church, was presented with a cope by the Cathedral League of Maryland. The presentation address in behalf of the League was made by Mrs. Josias Pennington, the President.

The cope is designed to be worn on special occasions by the Primate and his successors as a ceremonial robe of office. It is of gold brocade, especially woven for the purpose and the orphey is of silver cloth woven for the imperial family of Russia at the time of the coronation of the late Czar. The orphey is embroidered with figures of the Virgin, St. Gabriel, St. Peter and St. Paul. On the hood is embroidered the symbol of the Lamb of God standing upon the Book of the Seven Seals described in the Book of Revelation. The morse, or clasp, is of gold, silver and enamel set with jewels, with a figure of the Virgin and Child and emblems of the Ark and Dove in relief.

The Bishop, in accepting the cope, said it was not in honor of "Murray" but of Maryland that the cope was presented. He asserted that it was not because of his personality but because the Church had desired to honor the diocese that he had been elected Presiding Bishop.

ATLANTA.

Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

Conference of Colored Workers.

The conference of Colored Workers in the Province of Sewanee, met in St. Paul's Church, Atlanta, Georgia, October 18-20, 1927. At the opening service, welcome addresses were made by the Rev. W. J. Faulkner, pastor of the First Congregational Church, for the Churches of Atlanta; and for the Diocese of Atlanta, by the Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, Diocesan.

The special features of the conference were the President's annual address, the annual sermon by the Rev W. B. Crittenden, D. D., rector of St. Michael and All Angels' Church, Charlotte, N. C., and the annual sermon to the Woman's Auxiliary, by the Rev. J. B. Elliott, D. D., Archdeacon of the Diocese of Upper South Carolina, for Work Among Colored People.

Among the papers read were: Self Support, Dr. E. G. Bowden; Social Service, Miss C. O. McDowell; Religious Education, the Rev. J. E. Culmer.

Hereafter women are permitted to attend the conference as accredited delegates from the parishes and missions; provided they do not come as representatives from both their parishes and auxiliaries.

The Woman's Auxiliary held its sessions at the same time as the conference.

The officers of the conference are: President, the Rev. J. S. Braithwaite, D. D., Savannah, Georgia; Vice-President, the Rev. C. A. Harrison, M. A., Charleston, South Carolina; Secretary, the Rev. J. C. Perry, Brunswick, Georgia; Treasurer, Mr. Hiram Bell, Charleston, South Carolina.

The conference will meet in St. Mark's Church, Birmingham, Alabama, in 1929.

CHICAGO.

Rt. Rev. C. P. Anderson, D. D., Bishop.

Social Service.

At the recent state meeting of the Welfare Workers at Joliet, Ill., there was a meeting held at the suggestion of the Chairman of the Department of Christian Social Service of Springfield, the Rev. R. Y. Barber, of representatives from the three dioceses in the state, looking towards the forming of some united effort of work along the social service line. While the number of workers were small at the meeting, yet it was an earnest gathering and, under the fine leadership of Deaconess Fuller, of Chase House, Chicago, there was organized a Guild of Episcopal Welfare Workers. Dr. A. F. Newbery will be the first President, and Miss Kathleen Moore, Chicago, Secretary-Treasurer.

The big objective for the year is to find every Churchman who is engaged in welfare work in the state and work to get as many as possible to go to the next state meeting in Quincy, Ill., next fall, when it is hoped that we can have our Corporate Communion, breakfast and then a round table to plan for the future.

Intensive Week at St. John's, Montclair.

Under the chairmanship of Henry C. Quigley, Sr., a committee has been at work for some weeks preparing for an Intensive Week in the Parish of St. John's, Montclair, the Rev. James T. Lodge, rector. The Rev. William Way, D. D., rector of Grace Church, Charleston, South Carolina, has accepted the invitation of the parish to act as leader for the week of November 13. Dr. Way will conduct the regular Sunday services on November 13, and will preach every night at a general mass meeting. There will be a mass meeting for the women of the parish on November 15, and another for the children of the parish on Thursday afternoon. The Men's Club of the Parish will have an informal reception for Dr. Way on Tuesday evening, and the Young People's Fellowship of the Parish will have Dr. and Mrs. Way at their supper meeting on the evening of the thirteenth, when Dr. Way will address them. In preparation for this week, the rector and special committee have carried through a program which included six discussion group meetings, using Dr. Sturgis' book, A Church Awake; also they have had cottage meetings in the different geographical centers of the parish for the past six weeks.

While Passing Through.

J. L. B.

There's some good we all can do
In life, while passing through;
Ev'ry day throughout the year
Some aching heart—you can cheer,
If you but try, as the days go by,
To relieve some heart's sorrow—
Today—or tomorrow—
God's choicest blessings will fall upon you,
IF—you do—YOUR PART—
While passing through.

The Great and the Small.

Richard K. Morton.

What is truly large and great? A noted scientist recently pointed out the relative triviality of our planet, the Earth. This planet of ours is sailing its regular course on the fringe of galaxies millions of light years in diameter. There is a feeling of awe that comes over us when we think that we are small beings temporarily placed upon a mere speck in the universe.

Today, to a significant extent, we are worshippers of size and distance. We glory in the bewildering mathematics of the heavens, and the marvelous scientific inventions now in common use. We are apt, however, to learn to speed more rapidly over the earth without any regard for the people whom we pass on the way. We are apt to travel fast before we have planned some worthy destination. We are apt to set out upon life's journey before looking up the best highway which will allow us to develop speed with safety and with purpose. There are many who watch with awe the airplanes soaring in the sky, and yet fail to have a thought with similar power. Can mind not reach a higher level than cold metal? Cannot man's heart panting after God beat with pulsations of greater power than the engines that lift the airplanes? There is the need today of being great in mind and in soul, as well as in scientific possibilities. All things are not necessarily great which move with lightning speed or soar to empyrean heights. All things which travel do not have a worth-while destination. All things which have huge bulk are not necessarily of great value in supplying the needs of mankind. All things which occupy high and prominent positions in life are unfortunately not great.

A primal task in our quest of more abundant life is to be able to tell the great from the trivial and the large from the small. The shifting ministrations of the eye will not alone fulfill this mission. We cannot, even with the best eyes, know the true size of any object until we have a standard of comparison; nor can we expect to have our hearts seize upon true greatness and truly big issues of life until we have gone to those upper levels of experience where these things are appreciated. Though the earth be small and the body weak, yet can the mind soar up beyond the air; though the heart be humble and the soul contrite, yet may he who would communicate in prayer with God send his deeply moving message out beyond the limits of the twinkling stars. Though the proportions of our life be small, yet can its meaning and its work outrange the power of stellar light? Though we be specks that dwell for a time upon a planetary speck, yet can the power of our lives radiate a light which the sun would envy and generate a heat than even the solar ball could never supply to friends and loved ones? Encompassed about by the things which may so easily drag us down to baffled, weak littleness, we may nevertheless rise up in mankind's glory, with the name of Christ upon our lips. We know we are not great, but we can invoke supreme greatness; we have not power, but we can summon it to our aid. By our own resources we have not love, nor strength, nor endurance, but if we merely yield up our whole lives they are filled to the brim with God's love and strength which rushes in with greater majesty than the irresistible, untarrying tides of a great ocean.

What is truly large and great? The human soul radiant with the love of God. What is true power? The human soul mighty as it steps upon life's highway to put God's love to practice and to bring it to all mankind. With this greatness man reaches boundaries of the Infinite out beyond the gleamings of ageless stars; with this largeness man's life is filled with more beauty, purpose, and love than is the universe with starry wanderers. If the soul is great and full of godly powers, there is no greatness in life which can put it out of countenance; with God as man's goal, there can be no distance, no celestial immensity, which he must despair to reach. The greatest thing in the world is a human soul who has found God, loves God, and has embarked upon life's highway following in God's ways. The influence which is of boundless spread is the human heart radiant with the glow of spiritual rebirth, reaching out to all men and filling every nook and corner of experience. There is no lurking denizen of earth which can prevail against so glorious an armor; there is no majesty of infinite space which can produce so cherished a wonder.

Why Christian Missions?

The Christian missionary stands under the indictment of turning the world upside down. When preaching the Christian message means interfering with business that makes gain by exploiting the people of pagan lands, let him plead guilty. The gospel everywhere does disturb and ought to disturb a social and economic order founded on unrighteousness. Giving to the Orient the truths of modern science is completely revolutionizing the domestic and industrial life of people who were satisfied with the primitive tools and the superstitions of past ages. Just so certainly is Christianity making a new world in standards of physical living, in social ideals, in political rights, and in national aspirations. Jesus' is the one voice that is raised in every land in behalf of the poor and downtrodden. He is the Friend of men. The only power that can cope with racialism is the touch of Jesus. National prejudices cannot live in His presence. Christ, and Christ alone, is teaching men the secret of living together. In Him is life.

An Old Lady Knits.

I, who know more of death than those who died,
Must knit and wait
Until he leaves the lane to stand beside
My lonely gate;
I, who once struggled when he came to snatch
Those dear to me,
Must listen, till his pale hands left my latch,
Impatiently.

* * * * *

To youth a whispered word of Death appals,
But time and age
Make him a long-expected friend, who calls
And can assuage
Life's listlesness when all loved lips are dumb
And dreams are dim;
Since he has left nobody else to come,
I welcome him.

—John Hanlon, in New York Times.

His Way, or Yours?

An architect complains that many of his clients come and ask him to design a house for them, only to let him very speedily discover that they have already designed it for themselves. What they really want is his sanction of their own plan, and the satisfaction of seeing him draw on paper what they have fully in mind. It is in very much the same fashion that we often go to the Great Architect with our lives. We ask Him for wisdom and guidance, but we have already planned how we will build our fortunes and shape our course; and it is not His way we are seeking, but His approval of our way.—Selected.

One Chord.

How sweet the gift of life to me,
What joy one simple chord to be,
In God's Eternal Symphony.
The singing tone of happiness,
The minor strain of sorrow's stress
Combine in classic loveliness
Beneath the touch of God's caress.

O may the little chord called me,
Make richer far the harmony,
Of life's evolving symphony.

The Yoke and the Burden.

My yoke is easy, because it is for two. My burden is light, because Christ helps me carry it. If ever it seems heavy, let me remember that He is just beside me. I never toil alone; it is always my Lord and I.

A farmer driving home from market overtook a traveler with a pack on his shoulders, bowing under the heat and burden of the day. "Will you give me a lift?" said the weary man; the farmer assented, and the traveler climbed in behind him. As he drove on, happening to look behind him, he saw that the traveler's burden was still on his back. "Why don't you lay it down and rest?" asked he. "It is enough," replied the foolish man, "that you should carry me without carrying my burden, too."

Thus we journey heavenward, making our yoke hard and our burden heavy, because we forget that for Christ to carry us is no easier than to carry our burden with us. Unload, my friend, and learn the comfort of perfect trust. Get so far into accord with the Spirit of Christ that you shall be able to sing:

"How gentle God's command:
How kind His precepts are!
Come, cast your burden at His feet
And trust His constant care.

"His goodness stands approved
Down to the present day;
I'll drop my burden at His feet
And bear a song away."
—Dr. David Burrell.

God Is Counting on Us.

God is counting on us to tell His mighty acts. He counts on our getting in touch with Himself and experiencing His power to save, and to meet our every need. He counts on us telling others of Him. This is His plan for reaching the others. There are mighty acts of loving kindness that He wants to do. But He needs human channels. He wants to reach through us to the crowd. We limit Him if we fail Him. —S. D. Gordon.

Miracle.

(From The Circle.)

A withered root, and on a withered stem
Sway withered leaves; when sudden comes God's rain,
God's sunshine, and a miracle—a flower—
And leaves are green again.

A fluttering pulse, a life that flickers out,
A form that slowly stiffens into clay:
The prayer of faith, God's answering smile, and so—
The dawn of a new day.

So long the waiting! Yet I will believe.
Is God less God in this? Will He whose power
Can bring life out of death and from a root,
Shrivelled and sere, a flower.

Be powerless to aid me? No, my tears
Shall water this my hope, my prayers shall rise,
Knowing that somewhere I shall find God's smile
Reflected in your eyes.
—Jane N. Marr.

An Anniversary.

Fifty years ago Hiram Bingham, with his cultured wife, went to the Gilbert Islands, then inhabited by a tribe of cannibals, "sullen, passionate, cruel, treacherous", as they were described by the navigators of those days.

At the fiftieth anniversary 30,000 Christians met to celebrate their emergence from savagery to civilization. All the pastors of those Islands had been trained by their first missionary, and 11,000 copies of his translation of the Bible have been sold; 2,000 religious books are bought by the Gilbertese annually.

For the Young Folks

Sharing the Good News.

In days of old though dangers came,
His friends feared not to speak His name, Though scattered far, their guide they knew
And in the towns the churches grew.

They did not say, "Our lives we'll lose".
They knew their orders, "Go" not "Choose".
The love of Christ by many heard
The hearts of men had deeply stirred.

Oh! may that love cause us to go
To all the world the Christ to show.
The world needs Him so much today.
His "Go" is one we must obey.

LITTLE TALKS ABOUT THE BEST FRIEND.
The Present Christ.

M. L. G.

He lived on Earth, our Best Friend, nineteen hundred years ago. We think if we had been there, could have seen and touched and heard Him, we would have found it easy to believe and to follow. But we can learn of Him only through the written word, we cannot know for ourselves—

Do not think so! He was never more truly more greatly alive to our Earth and every soul in it than this very day. He left His friends that He might be more than only with them—might be in them.

And so we need not turn our face to Palestine, seeking Him out in desperate haste as the nobleman did who hurried down the steep road from Cana to Capernaum. We have but to listen at our own heart's door, and lo! there is a knock.

Even while He walked upon Earth, there were His own neighbors of Nazareth who heard His claim and cast Him out, there were Pharisees and Herodians, priests and soldiers, who knew Him not. Of those who saw Him risen in majesty "some doubted". It has always been by the eyes of Faith that He has been recognized. And He has called those blessed who believe without demanding sight.

So turn to Him, and you will find Him coming to meet you, follow Him and you will find that He shares His life with you. Learn of Him, and you shall find rest unto your soul.

A Polite Little Indian Girl in Washington.

Some time ago there were many, many Indians from the Far West in Washington, D. C., who had come to see their "Great White Father". Occasionally some of these Indians wore the beautiful garments of their tribes, made of buckskin trimmed with wonderful beading. A few of them walked the streets of Washington wearing their feathered head-dresses with feathers streaming down their backs to their very heels. They were all fine Indians, tall and strong; probably most of them were chiefs. They went about sightseeing like any other tourists, and were well-mannered and polite.

Sometimes we saw Indian women with the men and one day we saw a dear little Indian girl. She was walking along Pennsylvania Avenue with four big Indians and one Indian woman. These Indians were dressed like white men, except that they wore their long hair in tight braids tied with bright ribbons. In each Indian's hat, too, was a small bright feather.

We first noticed this group because one big Indian was wearing a pair of new tan kid gloves, and it seemed as if he didn't know what to do with his hands. He stretched them out in front, shook them in the air, motioned awkwardly, and seemed to feel most uncomfortable, but stylish. Then we noticed the Indian woman. She wore a beautiful dark blue satin dress, ready made, with wide and comfortable skirt, and a big, soft black shawl. The shawl was trimmed with a wide black-beaded border and deep, rich silk fringe.

Suddenly, at a crossing, the little girl, possibly a four-year-old, darted out from the group of Indians into the street, directly in front of a swift-coming automobile. Not an Indian made a sound; but, like lightning, the mother went after the child. It all happened in a few seconds: the child evidently saw the automobile and her mother at the same instant. She smiled, and then danced sidewise back to her mother. It doesn't seem possible that the mother could have reached the child before the automobile must have struck her. Yet that little unafraid girl danced back with such pretty little skipping steps it all seemed like part of a happy game. She was dressed like any little American child, with red shoes.

We walked behind the Indian group for a while, wondering what would happen next, and this was what happened. A little white girl, on roller skates, much older than the Indian child, was standing on a corner waiting for some one. We saw the little Indian girl stop and shake hands with the white child and say something before she ran to overtake her mother.

We asked the smiling child of Washington what the little Indian girl said to her, and this was the answer: "She said, 'Will you shake hands with me' Then she told me her name, but it was such a strange name I couldn't understand."

We hoped that we, too, might shake hands with the little Indian girl, but by this time the Indians were walking so much faster that the little girl had to run and skip to keep up with the procession, so nothing was left for us except to wish the little Indian girl a beautiful time in Washington and a joyful return to her home in the West.—The Child's Gem.

Rob's Gymnasium Ticket

"Mother, can't I buy a ticket to the gymnasium for this summer?" asked Rob Royse, twisting the door-knob and looking at her anxiously.

"How much does it cost?"

"Four dollars; but that includes baths and—and just lots of things.

"Could your little brother go in on your ticket?"

"No, of course not, but—"

"Then I am sure we can't afford it, Rob," she said, firmly.

"But, mother, I need it so! I'm all stooped over and weak-armed, and thin as a rail," he pleaded.

Mrs. Royse sighed, for what Rob said was true, and her great anxiety was to see her two boys grow strong and straight; still, they could hardly afford the four dollars just now, and she could not give to one and not to the other. So she answered, quietly:

"Alden needs it too, dear," adding after a pause, "I wonder if we could not have a gymnasium of our own?"

"If we had a big barn like Skillman's we could, but we can't stand up in our coal shed!"

"What about the back yard—an outdoor gymnasium?"

"That big, bare, old, bare lot!" he exclaimed.

"Yes; it needs to be big and bare, and the high fence around it is just the thing. The dead apple tree will make a fine hold for our swinging ropes, and we can easily fix up the place for basket ball, horizontal bars and all those things."

"And we'll have swinging ladders," put in Rob, suddenly all enthusiasm, "and Dollard Wright has a pair of sawhorses he'll give us. Say, mother, wouldn't it be nice to have Dollard in our gym?"

Mrs. Royse looked dubious. "We don't want a crowd of boys here—it would soon give us trouble, but three would make it nicer than two, so if you promise to ask no one else you may have him in it."

"And between us we have money enough to buy our Indian clubs right off. Mayn't I go over and tell him about it?"

Away he bounded, leaving his mother smiling over her work and planning eagerly how to transform the ugly back yard into a first-class gymnasium.

"I'll make them a floor mat by sewing together those two old mattresses in the attic and covering them with denim. It can be kept in the lattice porch at night. The best thing about the plan is that the boys are developing their muscles and they are in the open air at the same time, and are happy at home where I can be with them. Maybe I will get a little physical culture myself!" laughed the wise little woman, patting the finished sewing as if it had originated the idea.

That night the charter members of the Royse gymnasium held a caucus, as Rob called it, in the family sitting-room, and the most enthusiastic member of all was Mr. Royse himself.

"The first thing we must do will be to rake and clean the yard till it looks like new," he said, with a boyish laugh. "Then I'll see that the ropes are up good and strong, while you boys fix up other what-you-may-call-ems. If a punching bag doesn't cost too much we will have one in the corner."

This was greeted with cheers, Dollard exclaiming, "Oh, let me buy that! Father was going to give me a gym ticket and I'll just take the four dollars to get apparatus. Isn't it lucky that school is out next week?"

"And that tomorrow's Saturday!" added Alden.

"We can invent so many nice games with the apparatus," Dollard said, thoughtfully.

"I know one already," cried Alden. "It's to put a tin can—an opened one, you know—on the end of a pole, and see how many times you can throw it up and catch it on the pole again. It takes lots of practice!"

The older boys smiled somewhat contemptuously over this, but Mrs. Royse hastened to declare that it would be fine training for the muscles of the back. Although they tried it next day "simply for Alden's sake", Rob and Dollard got plenty of fun out of the tin cans during that jolly summer.

Indeed, the whole gymnasium was a grand success. To be sure, no grass grew in the Royse's back yard that year; but there are many things better than grass or even a pretty lawn. The boys, who spent hours and hours there, developed some respectably big muscles, and became very skillful in their games. And since there were only three of them and it takes four to play most games, Mrs. Royse was often coaxed to leave her work and join them.

When she declared she was "getting more physical culture than the housework could stand", the boys resolved to help. They washed dishes, made beds, swept rooms, and, in fact, as Dollard said, they "turned girl so that she could turn boy when the work was done".

"We're a Mutual Aid Society," she explained to Mr. Royse, while Alden whispered, confidentially: "Do you know, father, I never used to love mother as much as I do now. She's so jolly and always plays so fair!"

When fall came Mrs. Wright kindly offered the use of her big attic for the winter, and here, though somewhat hampered by low rafters, the boys continued their muscle training.

"Are you satisfied with your summer's gymnasium ticket, Rob?" asked Mrs. Royse with a bright smile as she helped him gather up his school books on the opening day.

"Well, I guess so!" he exclaimed heartily. "And it didn't cost four dollars, either, did it?"

"No. Do you notice how sturdy Alden has grown during the summer? He looks like a different boy."

"Sure enough! And Dollard and I have got biceps like a blacksmith's. Just feel that! I tell you, Mother, it's funny that every boy doesn't get up a gym of his own. Don't you think so?"—The American Boy.

The Oak Tree.

Once upon a time some squirrels had a cupboard in an old shed. They had stored acorns there from day to day. They did not know they were being watched, but a blue jay knew as much about that cupboard as they did.

One morning the last acorn was put away and the squirrels went to gather black walnuts which they had planned to store in a tumble down barn.

It pleased the blue jay to have the squirrels stop coming to the shed every day, for now he could go in and out whenever he pleased.

For a few days he enjoyed eating acorns. Then he decided that he would bury them here and there in the ground. As he was moving the last acorn it dropped and rolled out of sight.

Day after day leaves fell until the acorn was deeply covered with them. For three days and two nights it rained, making the leaf blanket soaking wet.

When the sun shone brightly again the leaf covering began to be warm and steamy. This was just what was needed to help a little sprout break through at the point of the acorn shell. For there is tucked away in the acorn shell the beginning of an oak tree, and this little root sprout is the part that begins to grow first.

All this time the rootlet is growing stronger and longer. As the little shoot which is to become the trunk of the tree, grows upward, a bud at its tip opens and two leaves appear.

While this growing has been going on, the baby tree has been getting food from the softened meat of the acorn, the shell of which falls off after a time.

All summer, sun, rain, and earth help the little tree.

When autumn comes there will be a tiny oak tree with a stout root, a hard stem for a trunk, and some leaves which will fall off when the time comes for the tree to go to rest for the winter.

After many years there will be a great oak tree under whose branches children will play and watch happy squirrels and birds busy in the way God meant such creatures to be.—The Sunbeam.

Our Garden.

The loveliest place in all the world,
The place where I love to go,
Is our garden—sunny and warm and sweet—
Where the walks are bordered with hollyhocks,
And the evening primroses blow in flocks.

Flocks of blossoms, like butterflies,
Poised in the air for flight,
Ready to swarm in the sunset skies
And flutter into the night,
Over the roses' fragrant heads
And over the velvety pansy-beds.

The clouds in the sky are snowy white;
The lilies are snowy, too,
And the sky is tender and pure and clear,
A fair forget-me-not blue;
And the sun shines soft and is warm for me;
Our garden is lovely as it can be.

The Spotted Pony.

"Oh, look, Harry! There goes a man with a horse and buggy, and a spotted pony tied behind the buggy."

Harry looked down the lane where David was pointing. Then he said, quickly:

"He's stopping and beckoning to us." Harry went to the gate to see what the stranger wanted.

"I wonder if I might water my horse and pony here?" the man said.

"Yes, sir," Harry answered hospitably. "Drive right in. There's a watering trough down by the barn."

The stranger drove in, unreined his horse, which drank thirstily; and, untying the pony, he also led it to the trough. It limped slightly and walked as if it were tired. The man looked at it anxiously, then at the boys who were admiring its pretty head and bushy tail.

"Is your father home?" he asked carelessly.

"No, sir," little David answered. "He and mother have gone to Aunt Sally's after some turkey eggs."

"I was wondering if your father wouldn't like to buy a pony for you boys," the man said.

"Oh, I wish he would!" said David. "Harry and I have five dollars apiece." Then Harry put a firm hand on his arm and silenced him.

"He's a good pony and worth a lot more, but he's going lame and I'm in a hurry to get home. Give me your ten dollars and the pony will be yours," he said to the older boy.

David begged Harry to buy the pony. Harry thought the pony had been stolen, or the man would make no such offer to get rid of it. A glance at the pony, worn out with long, hard travel behind the faster horse, decided him. In a few minutes the stranger was gone with the ten dollars, and the tired pony was in the pasture.

When father and mother came home and heard the story, they looked grave.

"David must remember not to tell strangers too much," father said. "But I am glad you took the pony, for its own good. You will not lose anything this time. The pony was stolen last night from the pasture of Mr. Wilkins over in Green Township. It is an old pet, and they are worried about it. Mr. Wilkins is offering fifty dollars for its return."

"O Harry, that money will come to us, then we'll save up again and buy a pony, won't we?" asked David eagerly.

"Yes," Harry agreed. "But I am glad we could do this old fellow a good turn first," and he patted the pony's back. "He was tired out when we bought him."—Cora S. Day, in The Herald and Presbyter.

A Tree Song.

Sing a song of oak trees,
Sing a song of pine;
Sing of elm and hickory,
Growing broad and fine.
Sing about the ash tree,
Poplar tree and beech,
Maple, birch, and apple tree,
Pear and plum and peach.

Sing of this or that tree,
Growing here or there;
All around the world, dear,
Every tree is fair.
North or south it may be,
Maybe east or west;
But take them all in all, dear,
The Christmas tree is best.

What Happened to Jennie's Jack-o'-Lantern?

Though it was a full four days before Hallowe'en, Jennie King had scraped and cleaned the biggest pumpkin that she could roll in from her father's corn field; it was a matter of considerable pride with Jennie to live up to the reputation she had established for herself of having the biggest and funniest jack-o'-lantern of any youngster in the River Bend community.

"I'll set a new record this year," chuckled Jennie to herself as she tiptoed to the corner of the barn whence she had hung the well-scraped pumpkin to dry. "I'll have a bigger and funnier one than ever."

In fact, it was all ready for cutting in of the face, and Jennie already had that outlined in her mind.

"What are you doing peeping in that door?" exclaimed the voice of Kittie Moore, Jennie's nearest neighbor.

Jennie swung the door to quickly and turned to face her friend.

"I know," declared Kitty, "you've got your jack-o'-lantern already made and don't want anybody to see it."

"Maybe so," answered Jennie, "but I'm not saying so."

"All the same, I've guessed it," answered Kitty, "but I'm going to see it, any way, cause I want to cut mine after the style you use."

"I haven't cut mine yet," replied Jennie thoughtfully, "and—and—that isn't all—I'm not going to cut the face in mine until right the last minute."

Kittie said no more about the jack-o'-lantern but the rest of the afternoon was a failure so far as happiness was concerned to the girls. Nevertheless, Kittie took her departure without so much as a glance at the object in the barn, and after she went away Jennie decided, just to make sure that nobody would catch a glimpse of her treasure, to hide it—so carrying the thinly scraped pumpkin to the hay-loft she tied it carefully to one of the rafters, banked hay about it and went to the house perfectly satisfied that no one would see it, and not until late on the eve of hallowe'en did she go near it again herself, and to her astonishment, when she went to take it down she discovered it was exceedingly heavy—too heavy, in fact, for her to hold up with one hand and untie with the other at the same time; time and again she tried to do so but failed. Then finally she climbed up and peeped into the pumpkin. Instantly a little shriek of surprise escaped her lips for one glance was enough to convince her she'd have to make another jack-o'-lantern for herself because Mistress Bunny, the pet squirrel that lived in the King barn through the winter had taken the unfinished article for a storehouse for her winter supply of nuts. having filled it almost full—too full for any girl with any sort of heart to throw away—so Jennie had to make another one, and because it was made so hurriedly she lost her reputation she found something far better—she found that selfishness was destroying her otherwise lovely nature, and then and there she resolved to change her ways. And this year—well, let's hope she regained her reputation as a jack-o'-lantern-maker, because she is helping her friends to make funny ones, too.—Presbyterian Banner.

That Little Fellow.

"A careful man I ought to be,
A little fellow follows me.
I do not care to go astray
For fear he'll go the self-same way.

I cannot once escape his eyes,
Whate'er he sees me do he tries.
Like me he says he's going to be—
That little chap who follows me.

He thinks that I am good and fine,
Believes in every word of mine;
The base in me he must not see,
That little chap who follows me.

I must remember as I go
Through summer sun and winter snow
I'm building for the years to be
The little chap who follows me.

A Little Boy's Sermon.

One Monday a little boy, who had been to church the day before, thought he would have a church of his own. He arranged his four sisters in front of him, then stood up on a stool and spoke very loud.

"This is to be a 'mind mother' sermon. There are two ways in which to mind everything she says:

"Mind her the first time she speaks. When mother says, 'Mary, please bring some coal or water', or 'Run to the shop', don't answer: 'In just a minute, mother.' Little folks' minutes are a great deal longer than the the clock ticks off. When you say 'Yes', with your lips, say 'Yes', with your hands and feet. Don't say 'Yes', and act 'No'. Saying 'Yes, in a minute', is not obeying, doing 'Yes' is. Mind cheerfully. Don't scowl when you have to drop a book, or whine because you can't go and play."—The Watchman.

The Jumping Fish of Siam.

Did you ever see a fish jump aboard a boat and knock a man down? That is what happened in Siam, when Rev. Mr. Jones and two assistants were making a journey.

One day a large fish jumped across the bow of the boat, barely missing the steersman's head. The missionaries laughed, and said they wished the steersman had come inside the boat for protection. But in a minute another fish made the jump, the steersman ducked his head, and the fish was hurled into the boat, knocking one of the men who was sitting serenely inside the boat to the floor.

Was the fish caught? No, indeed! It bounded from him out through the window into the river.

How would you like to catch a fish as you would a baseball? That is what happened to the next one that tried the flying leap.—"Over Sea and Land."

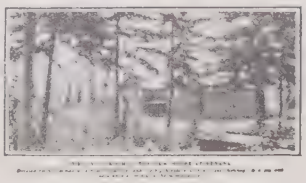
The Duel.

The gingham dog and the calico cat
Side by side on the table sat;
'Twas half-past twelve, and (what do you think!)
Nor one nor t'other had slept a wink!
The old Dutch clock and the Chinese plate
Appeared to know as sure as fate
There was going to be a terrible spat.
(I wasn't there; I simply state
What was told to me by the Chinese plate!)

The gingham dog went "bow-wow-wow!"
And the calico cat replied, "Wee-ow!"
The air was littered, an hour or so,
With bits of gingham and calico,
While the old Dutch clock in the chimney-place
Up with its hands before its face,
For it always dreaded a family row!
(Now mind; I'm only telling you
What the old Dutch clock declares is true!)

The Chinese plate looked very blue,
And wailed, "Oh, dear! what shall we do!"
And the gingham dog and the calico cat
Wallowed this way and tumbled that,
Employing every tooth and claw
In the awfullest way you ever saw—
And, oh! how the gingham and calico flew!
(Don't fancy I exaggerate—
I got my news from the Chinese plate!)

Next morning, where the two had sat
They found no trace of dog or cat;
And some folks think unto this day
That burglars stole that pair away!
But the truth about the cat and pup
Is this: they ate each other up!
Now what do you really think of that?
(The old Dutch clock it told me so,
And that is how I came to know.)



—Eugene Fisher.

Redeeming the time because the days are evil. Two little words are found in the Greek here. They are translated literally, "the opportunity". They do not refer to time in general, but to a special point of time, a juncture, a crisis, a moment full of possibilities and quickly passing by, which we must seize and make the most of before it has passed away.—A. B. Simpson.

Mister Fuzzy Wuzzy.

Fuzzy Wuzzy Caterpillar has a hundred feet.
Fuzzy rises in the morning, looking nice and neat.
But, for every foot on Fuzzy, there's a shoe to wear,
So he has to struggle over each and every pair.
How he laces, ties, and buttons till the task is done!
Then he has to take them off, Dears, 'cause the day's half gone.
If he did not start at noon, Dears, when he went to bed
How could poor old Fuzzy Wuzzy rest his weary head?
Let us learn to put our shoes on faster far than he,
Then we won't be Fuzzy Wuzzies, slow as slow can be.

Tale of the New House at Nenana
Bettcher Memorial Dormitory, Objective of Corporate Gift of Churchwomen, Opened
By Alice Wright

THE Editor of THE SPIRIT OF MISsions wants me to tell you that he wants a record of the new house at Nenana, so here it is. We moved in just before Christmas, as Uncle Thomas Day has said. It has been forty below some days so that week but a little thing like a low temperature did not daunt us when we were moving into the new house with its two real chimneys and where we could have a good roaring fire and not have nervous prostration at the sound of the roar. In the old house having wood mean a hot stovepipe and a very possible fire and a fire in Alaska at forty below with thirty children on one's hands is not pleasant to think of. And we managed to be in order for a Christmas with the house all decorated with wreaths and Christmas trees and stockings hanging round the fireplace—even as we had planned for many months.

The big room in the new house is a delightful place with its fireplace and windows looking out on the north side on the hill and river and into the woods on the south. We have windows wherever it is possible, to catch all the crisp winter sunshine and it is a bright cheery place.

We had all the usual Christmas parties, the dance on Christmas night for our children, and the village people the Christmas trees for the village children and their parents on Holy Innocents' Day. It was interesting to see how delighted the village people were with everything. We took them to see all the wonders of the new house the engine room where our own electric light plant abides and the pump which saves small boys many weary hours and sends up hot and cold water for our bath tubs. It may be a trifle too numerous for mononatics, but it is most pleasant. And it may be that Godliness will not be so difficult when cleanliness is a simpler matter.

Children in Mexico Taught by Example
"Short Street of Triumph" Leads to School
Having Teacher With High Ideals
By the Ven. William Watson
Archdeacon in Mexico

IN THE days before the teaching of religion was prohibited in educational institutions the children of a mission school in Mexico City were gathered about a visitor when the clergyman in charge interrupted the conversation by saying: "And it is time for service we will send the children home."

"Send them home? Do they not attend the services of the Church?"

"No, you see they are all Roman Catholics."

"But you have Church teaching on the day school, do you not?" "No, because the children would not come if we did."

"What do the children pay for their schooling?" "Nothing." It being decided that the Church's money was not being used properly, the school was closed temporarily as seemed best.

Another school was visited and the teacher, new to the country and its ways, was full of enthusiasm but admitted the lack of definite religious teaching and said: We will teach by example. If I can only teach American cooking and American ideals that will be a great work." The hearer could remember the conductor calling out: Twenty minutes for dinner," remembered that he belonged to a race of despotics and family asked,
"What are American ideals?" The silence was long and painful.

Then another journey was taken and the writer's steps were led along the street of Cuauhtemotzin into the street of Nezahualcoyotl and then into the Callejon del Triunfo (the Short Street of Triumph). Do I hear you pro-

JOHN BALDWIN NEILL.

Resolutions.

At a meeting of the Vestry of Grace P. E. Church, Berryville, Va., held October 14, 1927, the following resolution was adopted:

Whereas, Our Heavenly Father has called to eternal rest JOHN BALDWIN NEILL, to whom Grace Church is particularly indebted for his former loyal and interested services, both as an active Superintendent of the Sunday School for many years and as a faithful Junior Warden and Vestryman; and

Whereas, This Vestry shares the deep sense of bereavement and sorrow that must be experienced by his family; now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Vestry, in meeting assembled this fourteenth day of October, 1927, cause to be conveyed to the family of Mr. Neill the appreciation of the Vestry for his aid in our mutual efforts to the Church, together with an expression of its sympathy; and, further, be it Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this meeting and a copy be sent to the family of Mr. Neill.

G. H. WILLIAMS, Register.

ROBERT EMMETT FUNSTEN.

Entered into the life eternal on Monday afternoon, October 17, at the home of his son, Eugene M. Funsten, Hampton Park, St. Louis, ROBERT EMMETT FUNSTEN, son of the late Colonel David and Susan Meade Funsten, of White Post, Clarke County, and later Alexandria, Virginia.

A Virginian by birth, although residing the greater part of his life in St. Louis, Mr. Funsten loved and treasured the history and traditions of his native state, and was himself a typical representative of the Virginian gentleman.

From both sides of his house he derived the priceless heritage of an honorable and honored name, which he conspicuously exemplified in his own life.

An earnest Christian and a loyal lifetime member of the Episcopal Church, he was a devoted husband and father, a leader of the strictest integrity in the business affairs of his adopted city, and in social life a delightful companion.

In a very special sense his death will leave a vacant place in the hearts and lives of a wide circle of friends who had learned to know and love him.

In early manhood he married Charlotte Elizabeth Cook of Alexandria, and their life together was one of mutual devotion and unusual happiness until her death about five years ago.

Mr. Funsten is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Herbert Durand of Bronxville, N. Y., and by four sons, Fitzhugh L. of Kansas City, and Eugene M., Edward S. and F. Fairfax Funsten of St. Louis; the three latter having been associated with their father in the long established and well known business firm of the R. E. Funsten Company. He also leaves a number of grand-children, and two sisters, Mrs. Edwin S. Hinks of Casanova, Virginia, and Mrs. Robert M. Ward of Winchester, Virginia. His oldest son and namsake, Robert Emmett Funsten, Jr., died some years ago upon the threshold of a career of great promise.

During Mr. Funsten's illness of several weeks' duration he was constantly attended by his devoted daughter and sons, and the end came to him peacefully and with the consciousness that he was surrounded by his loved ones.

Funeral services were held in St. Louis from the Church of St. Michael and All Angels on Wednesday morning, October 19, the Church being filled with a throng of bereaved and sorrowing relatives and friends. A great wealth of flowers covered his last resting place in the family lot in beautiful Bellefontaine Cemetery.

"Mark the perfect man and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace."

MARY ANDERSON DAVIS.

On Sunday, September 4, there passed into that rest that remaineth for the children of God, MARY ANDERSON DAVIS, aged ninety years. Born in Goochland County in 1837, the daughter of Benjamin Cary Anderson and Mary Nelson, she passed the earlier years of her life in her native county and in Hanover. In 1860 she married the Rev. Dabney C. T. Davis and most of the years of their early married life were spent in and around Charlottesville, Va. Three daughters and six sons survive their mother.

To few persons does God give such length of days as was granted Mrs. Davis, yet to fewer still does there come such beautiful and steadfast devotion as was hers from her children. One could well see how the care and attention she received when she most needed them were but the natural expression of a deep love that bound mother to child and child to mother. When in the earlier days of a Virginia Rectory this mother had given the best of herself and all that she had that her children might lack nothing needful for the best interests of life, when to her sacrifices she added patience, to her patience cheerfulness, and to her cheerfulness love—to this unselfish and devoted life there came as an inevitable response from her children an honor and loyalty that were as eagerly rendered as rightfully received. So the evening of her life was without shadow of loneliness or want. Everything that medical skill could suggest was given before she could realize her need. The homes of her children were her homes, and the companionship of her loved ones was the happiest experience of her latter years. It was good to see the letter of one of God's ancient laws, "Honor thy Mother", lifted into the reality of spiritual things, as love fulfilled that law.

But the strength of her life, in the latter years as in the time of her bodily vigor, lay not in what she received, but in what she gave. Her faith in God was contagious; from her presence one went out more strongly to believe because of the benediction of her perfect trust. She was uncomplaining because she lived near to God, and His will for her became her wish for herself; so there could be no sadness, but a helpful cheerfulness about her, even in the days of her last sickness. Thoughtful of others, loving good company, as wise in her counsels as generous in her judgments, she gave to those who came under her influence all that Christian character can give to sweeten and ennoble life.

It is true of her many friends as it is of her children: "They shall rise up and call her blessed."

The Rev. F. Percy Houghton, formerly rector of Epiphany Church, Glenburn, Pa., has accepted a call to St. John's Church, Lancaster, Pa. His address after December 1 will be St. John's Rectory, Lancaster, Pa.

ORDINATIONS.

On October 29, 1927, the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Sterrett, D. D., ordained to the priesthood in St. Luke's Church, Scranton, Penn., the Rev. George Lorenzo Grambs, the Rev. Gordon Tyron Jones and the Rev. Paul Stevens Olver.

The preacher was the Rev. Dr. Percy Silver, Church of the Incarnation, New York City.

Archdeacon Walter read the Litany, Dean Gateson of the Pro-Cathedral read the Epistle, and Mr. Olver read the Gospel. Dean Holmes assisted the Bishop in the celebration.

Mr. Grambs is serving in St. Stephen's Church, Washington, D. C., Dr. Dudley being the rector. Mr. Jones is curate in St. Stephen's Church, Jersey City, N. J., the Rev. A. R. McWilliams, rector. Mr. Olver is the Headmaster of Mogegan Lake School and also will now be rector of St. Mary's Church, Mohegan Lake.

In addition to the clergy already named, the following from the diocese attended the service and took part in the laying on of hands: the Rev. R. P. Kreitler, the rector of St. Luke's; the Rev. Messrs. S. E. Neikirk, W. R. Holloway, H. W. Nanley, H. J. Fenwick, H. R. Taxdal, Joseph Groves, R. F. Kline, T. E. Archer, C. G. Lunn, F. P. Houghton, J. L. Hatfield, T. E. Winecoff.

On Saturday, October 29, in St. James' Church, Baltimore, Maryland, the Rt. Rev. John G. Murray, Bishop of Maryland, and Presiding Bishop, ordained to the diaconate Mr. David H. Croll, a teacher in the Dunbar Junior High School, and a candidate for holy orders. The Rev. Dr. George F. Bragg, rector of the parish, delivered the sermon, and presented the candidate. Bishop Coadjutor Helfenstein assisted Bishop Murray in the service of Holy Communion. Among those present to show their interest in this ordination were Dr. David E. Waglein, Superintendent of Education of the city, and one of the assistant superintendents, Mr. William R. Flowers. Mr. Croll has been rendering valued assistance to Dr. Bragg in the care of St. Philip's Chapel, Annapolis. He will remain as an assistant minister of the Rev. Dr. Bragg.

On Tuesday, St. Luke's Day, October 18, the Rt. Rev. John D. Wing, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of South Florida, advanced the Rev. Gwilym Llewellyn Glendare Thomas to the priesthood in St. Bartholomew's Church, St. Petersburg. Dean P. S. Gilman of St. Luke's Cathedral, Orlando, preached the sermon; and the Rev. G. I. Hiller, of Lakeland, presented the candidate. The litany was sung by the Rev. E. A. Edwards, of St. Peter's Church, St. Petersburg. The Rev. Wm. B. Curtis, of St. John's, Tampa, read the Epistle, and the Rev. Father Karaphylis, pastor of the Greek Church in Tarpon Springs, joined, with the other priests present in the laying on of hands.

The Rev. Mr. Thomas will continue in charge of St. Bartholomew's Church, where he has served since his ordination to the diaconate.

Mr. C. B. Lucas was ordered Deacon in St. John's Church, Winnsboro, Diocese of Upper South Carolina, by the Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, Bishop of the Diocese, All Saints' Day, November 1. Mr. Lucas was presented by the Rev. A. R. Mitchell; the sermon was preached by the Rev. L. N. Taylor. The Rev. A. E. Evison read the Epistle; the Rev. A. M. Rich read Scripture sentences and prayers before the service; the Rev. A. Rufus Morgan read the Litany.

Mr. Lucas is minister-in-charge of St. John's, Winnsboro, and St. Mark's, Chester, with address at Winnsboro, S. C.

In the Cathedral Church of St. Paul, Boston, on October 12 the Rt. Rev. Charles Lewis Slattery, D. D., Bishop of Massachusetts, ordained Richard Peters and Howard R. Lewis deacons.

The epistle was read by the dean of the Cathedral, the Very Rev. P. F. Sturges, D. D., the Gospel by Mr. Lewis, and the litany by the Rev. C. R. Peck of the Cathedral staff. The Rev. Appleton Grannis, rector of St. Anne's Church, preached the sermon.

Mr. Peters, who was presented by the Rev. Mr. Grannis, is to be minister-in-charge of St. James' Church, Amesbury. He was formerly a Congregational minister. Mr. Lewis, who was presented by Dean Sturges, is to be minister-in-charge of St. Anne's mission, North Chelmsford. Mr. Lewis comes from the Methodist ministry.

ORDER FROM SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN,
RICHMOND, VA.

IS THIS NECESSARY

and

IS IT FAIR?

"Pay-as-you-go" means "Keep appropriations within your expected income." This is the order of General Convention.

Pledges for 1927 fell short of Budget requirements by $251,000. The National Council was forced to cut this amount from appropriations desperately needed.

THE AXE FELL

And what follows is but one of many examples of the keenness of its blade

When word reached Kyoto, Bishop Nichols and his Council did their best to reduce expenditures. Still the total was less than the reduction required. Then Bishop Nichols put the situation up to the American missionaries. They all agreed that their salaries should be cut in order to make up the difference between needs and reduced appropriations. One missionary wrote what must have been in the minds of all:

> "It does seem a little tough to have to cut into one's salary after one has tried to be generous with the appeal for the year's quota. It will mean a little less of this or that that we meant to do for the purpose of recreation, and perhaps mean the giving up of long-cherished dreams.
> "All this means pinching and self-sacrifice.
> "I surely hope that we will not have to cut another year, for I do not like to do it even though this year I was prepared to take a cut of double the 1¾ per cent if necessary."

Is the Missionary paying from his pocket, money which ought to be paid from yours?

Thanksgiving Day

"O praise the Lord, for it is a good thing to sing praises unto our God: yea, a joyful and pleasant thing it is to be thankful.

The Lord doth build up Jerusalem: and gather together the outcasts of Israel.

He healeth those that are broken in heart: and giveth medicine to heal their sickness.

O sing unto the Lord with thanksgiving: sing praises upon the harp unto our God:

Who covereth the heaven with clouds and prepareth rain for the earth: and maketh the grass to grow upon the mountains and herb for the use of men;

Who giveth fodder unto the cattle: and feedeth the young ravens that call upon him.

Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem: praise thy Son, O Sion.

For he hath made fast the bars of thy gates: and hath blessed thy children within thee.

He maketh peace in thy borders: and filleth thee with the flour of wheat."

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

There is but one way in which man can ever help God—that is by letting God help him.—Ruskin.

It is only the great-hearted who can be true friends; the mean and cowardly never know what true friendship means. —Charles Kingsley.

At the end of one mercy is the beginning of another; so should the end of our thanksgiving be.—Matthew Henry.

"Endeavor to be patient in bearing with the defects and infirmities of others, of what sort soever they be: for that thyself also hath many failings which must be borne with by others."

We give Thee thanks, O Lord!
Not for the palaces that wealth has grown,
Where ease is worshipped—duty dimly known,
And pleasure leads her dance the flowery way;
But for the quiet homes where love is queen
And life is more than baubles, touched and seen,
And old folks bless us, and dear children play;
For these, O Lord, our thanks!
—Robert Bridges.

For all that God in mercy sends—
For health and children, home and friends;
For comforts in the time of need,
For every kindly word or deed,
For happy thoughts and holy talk,
For guidance in our daily walk—
In everything give thanks!

Of course every day should be a day of thankfulness;; but it is well to lift one day above the level of all other days, and label it by official proclamation, "Thanksgiving Day", as a reminder that we are enjoying blessings which ought to be publicly acknowledged by us at the throne of God.

THANKSGIVING

This is the most powerful and, so far as human foresight may discover, the most securely established nation in the world, its influence more far-reaching, its wealth more enormous, than ever has been given to any nation or country. It has grown from nothing to greatness with unprecedented swiftness. There is magnificent impressiveness, perhaps solemn meaning, in the fact that our nation is the one that fixes a day on which all are urged to cease from customary labors to kneel in humble praise and thanksgiving to that God whose dwelling place is beyond our imaginations, whose power is infinite, whose purposes for our race we may not comprehend, in whom we believe and whom we worship. "In all thy ways acknowledge Him and He will direct thy paths" is the counsel and prediction of the great king and wise statesman of long ago.

The splendid custom was begun by very poor and constantly endangered people who had trusted themselves to the care of the Almighty in frail craft upon strange and stormy seas, journeying to a wild, new land. Enduring hardships, their fate apparently continually in doubt, few in numbers, clinging precariously between a rock-bound shore and a wilderness peopled by savage foes, they set apart a day for thanksgiving. The nation, as it spread and increased, adopted and accepted the example. The day was made officially a national holy day while our country was suffering the miseries, horrors and perils of civil war. With restored peace and growing strength, prosperity and dominion, we have retained it. The President and the chosen Governors of forty-eight sovereign and united States proclaim the dependence of the hundred and twenty million of us, free, self-governing, potent people, holding vast, rich territory, on the compassion of the Governor of all, exhort us to grateful recognition of His omnipotence, to dedicate a working day on which to testify our grateful reverence.

The year since the last Thanksgiving Day has brought disasters, as has every year recorded in history. It may be with peoples, as with individual men and women, that disaster and misfortune wisely used for lesson and correction will bring blessings, do much for advancement and development and future happiness. The millions who have died of plague and pestilence did not die in vain. Their deaths stimulated thought and courage to discovery and use of preventives and cures. Generations to come will live free from the blighting dread, the pain and ruin and destruction that formerly came at almost regular intervals. Great fires have taught us to build more securely and to provide effective defense. These recent freshets will bring protection to assure children of today, as they grow to maturity and age, serene, permanent safety on millions of acres of fertility. The anguish of the countless millions slain and stricken in wars has not been in vain. Gradually, but surely, the conscience of mankind is aroused against war, the best intellect, the noble philanthropy and the wide interests of commerce are enlisted against it. There is mysterious beauty, the majesty of gloriously sweet music never ceasing and heard from very far away, in the thought that the message and promise of universal peace that heralded the birth in a stable and to lowly station may be fulfilled by the masses of the working, untitled, struggling people as they win control, and the despots and war lords and absolute monarchs vanish to join the feudal lords and fighting barons of the past. "The giant forces of empires on their way to ruin, one by one they topple and are gone." Thought directed by spiritual impulse, guided by the instincts of the Divinity to which we are akin, is busier now than ever before. We are moving, we do not know where, but moving forward more speedily and surely than ever before. To us it seems a long, a bloody, a misery darkened way since that night of the Annunciation, but it is not for feeble sense to judge Him in whose sight a thousand years are as yesterday, to whose Kingdom there shall be no end, whose designs are for that eternity we cannot conceive. Despite disaster on land and sea, the disappointments and sorrows that have come to many of us personally, despite the follies and lapses, the shouted heresies and treasons, the vulgarities and crimes, all about us, there is more reason for confidence in the coming purification, elevation and better happiness of mankind and of this favored country of ours than any former years has brought; therefore, more inspiration for devout, profound and joyous gratitude and humility.

"Praise the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me; praise His holy name."

The day will be misused and profaned by many in many ways. It has been so through the ages with all sacred days. "On the day of your fast ye find pleasure and exact all your labors. Ye fast for strife and debate and to smite with the fist of wickedness." So wrote Isaiah twenty-seven centuries ago. So it has been since. So it will be this Thanksgiving Day. But in every community some will gather to bow their heads and lift up their hearts, in ardent thanks, in living love and unfaltering trust and earnest supplication. These will say from their souls: "And we beseech Thee give us that due sense of all Thy mercies that our hearts may be unfeignedly thankful; and that we may show forth Thy praise not only with our lips, but in our lives."

Not everywhere nor by all worshippers and givers of thanks will the stately language of the Book of Common Prayer be used. For many congregations the words will be crude and the sentences uncouth, perhaps. But all the millions who will be praying and thanking will be feeling and meaning alike—from the one ocean to the other, from Florida to the Canadian border, in tropic Hawaii and ice-bound Alaska, the remote, uncultured people in little frame meeting houses, maybe in the schoolhouses, the learned and opulent surrounded by the stained glass and lofty walls of the great city churches. All will be together in faith and adoration. And these millions make the controlling and directing sentiment of this country, in any vital issue determine its policies. For that condition, for our growth and progress, for the ever increasing kindliness and understanding of mutual dependence and obligation between our capital and labor, for the restoration of peace among ourselves, for deliverances and blessings unnumbered—many of which we may not yet know—let us use the day as it is set apart and intended to be used. For our ever expanding opportunity to do good for the world and to show mercy and promote peace, let us unite with fervent thanks high resolves that we shall not be slothful servants in the illimitable work that is being done, but shall be ever earnest and vigilant in endeavor to help, in our capacities as members of churches, neighbors and citizens and parts of this mighty power of ours; and so offer to our Master not only our gratitude, but our diligent service.

"The tumult and the shouting dies,
The captains and the kings depart;
Still stands thine ancient sacrifice,
A broken and a contrite heart.
Lord God of hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget; lest we forget."

ALFRED B. WILLIAMS.

The issue as joined now seems to be between the fundamentals and the mental funnies.

Not much comfort for the modernists, liberals and mourners over the spread of the "Bible belt" who recently were eloquent and lachrymose in Washington in the celebration of Armistice Day in that city. Fighting men, thinking men and doing men united very earnestly in singing such Fundamentalist productions as "Onward, Christian Soldiers", "O God, Our Help in Ages Past", "Oh, Valiant Hearts", and in such Fundamentalist performances as praying to the God of Battles in the name of Christ and placing in the cemetery of the soldier dead a cross of stone. Really, it looks as if the "Bible belt" encompasses not only this country, but the Dominion of Canada. And when the British lion and the American eagle unite for a cause it may be regarded as fairly safe to be permanently dominant.

THE ANGEL OF REPOSE

Some years ago when the Panama Canal was being dug a visitor going through the Culebra Cut asked the engineers when the slides would cease. "Not until the angle of repose is reached," he said. What a beautiful phrase that is and how applicable to the turbulent unrest today. Figuratively speaking we are suffering from slides in almost every realm. There is instability begun in the family and reaching to the State; there is religious and political chaos. God has provided a remedy for it, and when truly applied it works unfailingly. It is found in the Gospel, by accepting which every tormented soul has found its angle of repose.

What a contrast is presented between the peace and rest offered in the Gospel and the heaving unrest that exists in the world. The very genius of Christianity is rest, finality. "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." It works to establish, to root, ground, settle one. This condition as a result of faith is beautifully described when the Psalmist says: "They that trust in the Lord shall be even as the Mt. Zion which may not be removed, but standeth fast forever." This is so because man through the Gospel becomes a son of God. And as Augustine has said: "Thou, O God, hath made us for Thyself and our hearts are restless till they rest in Thee." But how may men rest in God? Only because of a way into the holiest being purchased by the blood of His dear Son. He made peace by His Cross. There can be no rest until we rest on the Finished Work of Christ. The cure for unrest is found in God's revelation of a sin bearer even Christ who was "delivered for our offenses and raised again for our justification". There is always a wandering quest for God until we accept the death of the Lord Jesus as a sacrificial atonement for sin. What is conversion but putting down all rival claimants in the heart? With Christ as Saviour enthroned in heart and will, an authoritative government as it were, causes one to dwell securely under his vine and fig tree. There can be no peace anywhere until there is peace with God. And "it is the blood that maketh atonement".

Over against those who accept a whole Bible and the blood atonement are the modern apostles of freedom who deny this basic fact, this sine qua non of the Bible and the Christian Gospel. Here is where pure religion and adulterated religion divide. Abel showed faith in God's revealed method of approach to Him when he brought the firstling of the flock. God testified of his gift that he was righteous—a beautiful type of the believer now justified by the blood of the Lord Jesus. Cain, a type of the moral man brought the fruit of a sin cursed earth, and was rejected. His after state describes the Cainites today, fugitive and vagabond in the earth, in other words a state of constant unrest. Sin broke up God's rest and brought all the unrest into the world. No one escapes from it until he takes the remedy provided on Calvary. See the quiet trysting time of Adam with God until the father of lies uttered his sneering doubt—"Yea hath God said". Then later behold the fleeing pair. Clearly the root of unrest is sin. "The wicked are like the troubled sea, for it cannot rest, and its waters cast up mire and dirt.

Evolution has taken peace from the earth. It is seeking to undermine God's Word; its apostles are left like Noah's dove, finding no rest for the sole of its feet in a world under judgment. In many cases they accept man's word rather than God's. It reminds one of Fair Havens, when Paul, under divine inspiration urged them to set sail, but the Centurion listened to the captain of the ship rather than Paul. They are still doing this—listening to man more than God, and the result is the Euroclydon is on us. They have sown the wind and are reaping the whirlwind. The world is scudding before a storm of evil and the leaders, having taken away the truth, sit by powerless, and "let her drive".

Mr. S. D. Gordon, in his inimitable way, illustrates the point in the following:

"It was at a social gathering of a group of brilliant, intellectual men. The skeptical man had, as was his wont, taken occasion to make ugly flings at the Christian religion in his usual keen, eloquent way. Beecher listened with the others. After a pause he broke in abruptly by telling of a scene he had witnessed that day on one of the streets of New York.

It was a rainy day, with the streets in bad shape. A badly crippled man was hobbling painfully along on his crutches, picking his way over the crossing of one of the busiest thoroughfares, when a strong, burly man came roughly along, and rudely ran into the cripple; the poor fellow's crutches slipped this way and that, and he fell a-sprawling in the soft slime of the street. But the strong man, instead of apologizing and helping him up, laughed coarsely at the poor fellow's plight, and kept on his way.

As Beecher told the story in his own inimitably vivid way the company present expressed their disgust with such conduct, the skeptical man heartily condemning it. Beecher looked him full in the face and said slowly, "Thou art the man; we are all crippled by sin; Christianity is helping us find our way along the road of life, even then a painful, hobbling way; you come along ruthlessly and knock out the only help we have to hold us up and steady our steps, and offer nothing better, but leave us sprawling hopelessly in the mire". With his great keenness Beecher had characterized the whole class of skeptics, unbelievers, whose whole pleasure seems to be in telling what they do not believe, and in disturbing those who do honestly believe something.

Unbelief is the great open sore of the world. It sent Israel wandering in the wilderness forty years. They could not enter in because of unbelief. The liberal school of theology live in doubting castles and have enlisted under Giant Despair. They are ever shifting, changing, scanning the horizon for some new theory, swept by winds of vain doctrine, luring by will o' the wisps into uncertainty and confusion. God says be still and know, but the modern schools tell us they cannot be still—they are hurrying to new processes, new light, changed interpretations, revolution of the old, to cutting of moorings and drifting. Chesterton well says: "Change is about the narrowest groove a man can get into."

What a relief to turn from this state of things to one who has grown old with God. Look at the placid face of the aged saint—one who has known the God of the Word and walked with Him. There is a sure and steadfast hope that brings tranquility because there is a sure and steadfast Word. "Great peace have they who love Thy law, and they are not offended at it." They have reached the angle of repose. Others doubtful of portions of the Bible here and there are sliding, but the former are fixed on the solid foundation of the impregnable rock of Scripture—they rest in the Lord and they are as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land. They have definite conviction, crystallized in experience, not fluid, but set like adamant—based on the Word of God. This means a final authority. We look in vain for any such from man. His dictum in one generation is overturned by the next. The eternal God is our refuge. How comforting when He says: "I am Jehovah, I change not. My word shall stand. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but My Words shall not pass away." While through the ages they have been hewing and hacking at this troublesome authority it stands firmer than ever. The grass of man's vaunted opposition of science withereth—the flower of a false philosophy fadeth, "but the Word of our God shall stand forever".

Thank God by faith in it as the inspired Word of God we reach the angle of repose, we rest securely, we lie down in green pastures, we journey by the still waters, we are delivered from death's fears and look forward to waking up in the glory of land where there "remaineth a rest for the people of God". THE HOLY SPIRIT AND THE WORD OF GOD

By Kenneth Mackenzie

AN unbridgable chasm threatens to separate two classes of Christian thinkers. Those who hold with the historic Christian Church in its estimate of the Holy Scriptures; those who follow the advanced scholars of the day. The latter are dedicated to the belief that the Book may contain the Word of God, but that mingled are folklore, myth and allegory, dross from which the pure Scriptures must be separated. This process has been so drastic as to rob the Word of God of its essential qualities. The legendary character of Genesis; the composite authorship of Isaiah; the elimination from the Book of the supernatural; the daring assumption that the Gospels do not contain the history of our Lord's life, but are a fabrication embodying that which the writers felt should adequately represent what He should have been and done, that the doctrines introduced into Christianity might have a basis for promulgation; the evident interpolation of metaphysics and Grecian mysticism into the Pauline writings; these all combine to put the Bible on a plane utterly at variance with the reverent and authoritative devotion it has always commanded.

Bewildered, we stand at the parting of the ways; and unless the current can be arrested, many will drift from the divine anchorage. But the salvage can be effected only in the spirit of kindliness of heart and sweet reasonableness of thought; yet, with a firm adherence to essentials until now unquestioned. If there be ribaldry, biting sarcasm, intellectual pride, lofty superiority, it must come from those who oppose the old way. Let us who would "contend for the faith once for all delivered to the saints" be lovable, tender, sympathetic, free from cynicism.

Our present pursuit is to trace with humble hand the ways of God as disclosed in His Word for the enlightenment of those who are willing to do His will at any cost. For the precious juices of this inestimable gift will yield only to those who are in the spirit of teachableness. The process will be checked if in self-opinion, premeditated conceptions, or personal prejudice, one comes to the task of knowing the truth. To square the Word of God by the inventions of unbelievers; to subject it to the analytical standards of the so-called New Knowledge, must in the nature of the case defeat the end sought. We may be charged with pitiable ignorance, blind bigotry, stubborn dogmatism, a die-hard obstinacy; but if we have the testimony that the Word of God "effectually worketh in them that believe" (1 Thess. 2:13), let us say so with no uncertain tone.

The initial feature of the secret lies in the oft-repeated declaration that the Holy Scriptures are named the Word of God: that to that Word are ascribed elements of singularity which elevate it above purely human writings. That Word, originally embracing the ordinances and statutes of Israel, was qualified with supernatural potency Deut. 32:47; Ps. 107:20; 119:11, 50:105); it is fixed for all time (Ps. 119:89; Isa. 40:8; 55:8-11; 1 Peter 1:25). God's thoughts towards us cannot be received by us unless they come to us through this Word (Ps. 40:5; Isa. 55:8-11; Jer. 29:11-13). The office of the Word to be a life-giver and sustainer is of incalculable preciousness and indubitable certainty (Job 23:12; Jer. 15:16; Matt. 4:4 with Deut. 8:3; John 6:63; 17:17; Col. 3:16; 1 Thess. 2:13; James 1:21; 1 Pet. 1:22, 23; 2:2). The Word of God is inseparably joined to the life of our Lord. Not only that He is the Incarnate Word (John 1:1, 14), but that all He did was anticipated by the Word of the Lord to Israel (Luke 24:25-27, 44-46). We are reminded, too, that constant reference is made by the New Testament writers to Old Testament predictions of Him. And He sublimates it all in His own declaration (Matt. 24:35).

Let us take cognizance of the fact that to one man, the father of a race, the perpetuation of which is the miracle of history, a covenant was made, which in the development of the national life took the form of the oracles of God (Rom. 3:2) sublimating in the Word of God as we now have it. And let us be reminded that when this man was thus separated to be the Friend of God (2 Chron. 20:7; Isa. 41:8; James 2:23), there was no parallel in all the world to this condescension of Deity to humanity.

The writers of the Book, therefore, assume that it has a divine origin. The statement of St. Peter in 2 Peter 1:21 is confirmed by other authors (Num. 16:28; 2 Sam. 23:2; Micah 3:8; Luke 1:70; 2 Tim. 3:15-17; 1 Peter 1:11; Rev. 19:10). In writing the Gospel, St. Luke (1:3) uses a word, anothen, which everywhere else is made to read "from above" (John 3:3, 7 (marg.); 3:31; 19:11; James 1:17; 3:15, 17). So that he not only maintains that he had understanding of those things most surely believed, but that such understanding came to him by inspiration of the Spirit; and like his fellow-laborer in Gal. 1:11, 12, he would have us comprehend that his message is not his, but God's.

Admitting the postulate that the Holy Scriptures came to holy men through the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, there should be no perplexity as to the character of the Word of God. Is it hidden in a mass of human rubbish, which we may politely call "romantic idealism", who is to determine what is what? The rather, if we allow that the Holy Spirit had aught to do with this marvellous life-giving message, may we not credit Him with the intelligence, the care, the holy purpose to include in the Holy Writings only what He would retain, to delete what He would not hold there? Surely, this is but rational.

Now, why have we this wonderful Word? To criticize, to submit to laboratory tests that we may find its flaws and expose its weaknesses? If we do, we shall surely lose the vision. Let us use a simple illustration: You have a home. Essentially it has floors, walls and furnishings. The boards may have cracks, the walls may be irregular in places, the ornamentations may be defective in spots. An architect enters; he is concerned as to its fidelity to the class it represents, its construction and materials. He leaves the house with some measure of criticism; but it has made no contribution to his life. The artist calls with a similar purpose; he studies your wall decorations, your paintings, your arrangement of furniture; he leaves as did his predecessor, secretly idealizing a scheme which he tolerantly allows you have failed to reach. But is your house to you only an architectural, esthetic creation for admiring gaze or profound criticism? No. When you enter it and close the door against the wintry blast, your heart wells up in thankfulness for its protection. A fascinating sense of its being very home to you sweeps over your glad soul. For it is to you what it can never be to others.

So with our Bible. Students may be able to take it apart and show what they assume to be its crudities, expose its apparent incongruities; but when they have made their decision, we are robbed of its spiritual values; there is no heart-warming sense of its inspirational supply and wealth of soul strengthening. They have frozen its springs by their frigid analyses.

And while the house you live in is home to you as it is not to any others, there is a lack in the atmosphere if there be not another to share with you its comforts and delights. The man who isolates himself has not a home; it is but a place to breathe and sleep and eat. All the joy of home lies in that other life or those other lives who enjoy it with you. Now, who resides in this spiritual house we call the Word of God? Is it not the Builder Himself? Is it not He who makes it home to us? And as we traverse the rooms from one to another, embracing history, prophecy, poetry and rule of life, is it not in the consciousness of His leading and unfoldings? From Him we receive the interpretation of the grace of God who planned the home for our delectation. It is He who through the Word reveals the Father; and His Son, whom we love as Lord and Saviour. Increasingly do we become enamored of this fellowship. And we also grow to cherish those whose lives and service fill the Book with touching reminders of their humanity and common weaknesses with ourselves; living friends they grow to be, whom we long in God's good time to see and know in the fuller life that is to come. Led of this dear Comforter (Rom. 8:14) we rise unto the standard of the apostolic benediction: "The God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope through the power of the Holy Ghost" (Rom. 15:13).

PLAIN BIBLE STUDIES

Prepared by J. T. Bougher.

Note: In this new series of studies effort will be made to set forth in brief form wondrous things that God would have us know as told in His own eternal words.

Lesson No. 8.

Topic—The Return of Our Lord (First stage).
(Read Matt. 24; Acts 1:11.)

The full Gospel story necessarily includes the return of our Lord for His Bride, the Church, made up of all true believers regardless of visible Church affiliation.

It is His desire that each one of His own "Blood-bought band" know of this blessed truth and attending events, as attested by numerous Scriptures; "and he that hath this hope purifieth himself".—1 John 3:3.

Our Lord's return is the key to all prophecy, and the highway of the New Testament leading to the consummation of "this present evil Age". So vital is this knowledge and the faithful ministry of the Word in connection therewith, that ministers of wide repute testify to a complete revolution in their preaching, upon ascertaining and believing what the Word of God reveals on this vitally important subject. To the believer it is the gate-way to a closer walk with God, the study of His Word, the love of souls, and a turning from the perishing things of this world to an affection for things eternal.—Titus 2:11-13; 1 Peter 1:6, 7; 2 Tim. 4:7, 8.

We should be careful to distinguish between the secret "Rapture" when Christ calls His Church suddenly to meet Him in the air, and His later visible return with His Church in power to set up His earthly millennial reign; thus affording an intervening season for Daniel's seventieth week or "time of trouble", and for the completion of Israel's prophetic history. Hence Matthew 24 carries a two-fold message, one for the Church and one for the Jews after the Church is lifted from this earthly scene.

Let us, therefore, consider a few of many Scriptures, concerning this most wonderful coming event in the world's history.

The Rapture, or Christ's Call For His Church.

1. The assurance of His return for His own.—John 14: 3; Heb. 9:28.
2. The manner of His descent.—1 Thess. 4:16; Acts 1:11.
3. The manner of believer's ascent to meet Him.—1 Thess. 4:17.
4. To be a great mystery.—1 Cor. 15:51, 52.
5. Our bodies changed from mortal to immortal.—1 Cor. 15:44-54.
6. Will be done quickly and secretly.—1 Cor. 15:52; Luke 12:39, 40; Rev. 3:3.
7. Our Lord does not come to earth; we meet Him in the air.—1 Thess. 4:17.
8. A startling separation.—Luke 17:34-36.
9. The "blessed hope" of every true believer.—Phil. 3: 20; Titus 2:13; 1 John 3:2, 3.
10. The day and hour is unknown.—Matt. 24:36, 44; Heb. 10:37.
11. The world will be following its usual pursuits.—Matt. 24:37-39.
12. To occur at a time "when we think not".—Matt. 24:44.
13. Scoffers and unbelievers will ridicule.—2 Peter 3:3; Jude 4:13.

Topic—The Return of Our Lord (Second Stage).
(Read 2 Thess. 1:7-12; Rev. 19:11 to 20:15.)

After the Church (like Enoch) is "caught up" to meet her Lord in the air, as reviewed in the preceding lesson we might properly follow as our topic "the great tribulation", which then sweeps over the entire world, no longer restrained by the Holy Spirit (2 Thess. 2:7), which iniquity it will be noted prevailed or began even in the Apostle's time. But as our topic refers more especially to our Lord's return, we pass over this awful "time of trouble" to the second stage of His coming, known as the "Revelation". As stated in previous lessons we need to be careful in "Rightly Dividing the Word of Truth", especially in prophecy, as for example, in one place we read that He will come as a thief in the night (silently and unseen), while we also are told that He will come in great power and glory, and every eye shall see Him. When we once recognize the two different stages of our Lord's manifestation at the end of this stage, any apparent contradiction is at once removed, for the Word of God never contradicts itself. There are other prophecies which refer to the full course of events in one view, as for instance, "the great day of the Lord", which really involves the full end time crisis.

In Rev., Chapters 4 and 5, the Church is gone from the earth, and in Chapters 6 to 18, there is described that which takes place on earth and in Heaven, while in Rev. 19, we have our Lord's return in great power to suppress evil, bind Satan and establish His earthly kingdom. Let us note carefully the stupendous, yet solemn, events towards which the world is unconsciously drifting.—2 Peter 3:4; Luke 18:8; Luke 17:26 to 32; 2 Tim. 3:1-13; Jude 1: 3-25.

The Revelation; or Christ's Return With His Church.

1. The forecast of His return to earth in power.—Matt. 24:30.
2. The time; Immediately after the tribulation.—Matt. 24:29, 30.
3. As King of Kings and Lord of Lords.—Rev. 19:16.
4. The manner of His coming.—Rev. 19:11-16.
5. Every eye shall see Him.—Rev. 1:7.
6. They also which pierced Him.—Zech. 12:10; Rev. 1:7.
7. Revealed from Heaven with His mighty angels.—1 Thess. 1:7.
8. The saints of His beloved Church with Him.—1 Thess. 3:13; Zech. 14:5.
9. Followed by the armies of Heaven.—Rev. 19:14.
10. To punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity. —Isa. 26:21. And taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.—2 Thess. 1:8; Rom. 6:17.
11. His feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives.—Zech. 14:4.
12. The real Armageddon; The Anti-Christ and Kings of the Earth and world powers controlled by the forces of evil and spirits of demons, gather in the awful world conflict against our Lord and the Armies of Heaven.— Rev. 19:19; Rev. 16:14, 16.
13. The awful carnage.—Rev. 14:20; Rev. 19:17, 18; Ezek. 39:12.
14. The Anti-Christ captured; and Satan bound for 1,000 years.—Rev. 19:20; 20:2.
15. The Jewish remnant gathered in Palestine and there

14. "But, ye beloved, keep yourselves in the love of God."—Jude 21; "Look for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ."—Titus 2:13.
15. There awaits a crown of righteousness which the Lord will give on that day, to all who love His appearing.—2 Tim. 4:8.

The Purpose and Result.

16. To terminate this present "Church age".—Matt. 25:10; Rev. 14:14-16.
17. The marriage of Christ and the Church.—Matt. 25: 1-10; Rev. 19:7, 8; Eph. 5:25, 27.
18. To escape "the great tribulation".—Luke 21:36; Rev. 3:10.
19. To deliver us from the wrath to come, and from a world fast ripening for judgment.—1 Thess. 1:10; Psalm 27:5.
20. That God may again deal with Israel.—Matt. 24; Daniel 12:1. Israel's final punishment; their awakening, and restoration to the promised land in Palestine.—Lev. 26:44, 45; Deut. 4:30, 31; Deut. 30:1-3; Isa. 11:11, 12; 2 Sam. 7:10; Amos 9:15; Ezek. 36:24-28; Jer. 23:3-6.
21. To reward believers for service.—Matt. 25:19; Rev. 2:17; 22:12; 1 Cor. 3:14.
22. That we may be like Him.—1 John 3:2; Phil. 20:21.
23. To give victory over death.—1 Cor. 15:22, 52.
24. To enter our eternal habitation.—2 Cor. 5:1; Rev. 22:1-7.
25. To be with our Lord forevermore.—John 14:3; 1 Thess. 4:17.

"Wherefore comfort one another with these words."—1 Thess. 4:18.

"Even so, come, Lord Jesus."—Rev. 22:20.

Lesson No. 9.

besieged by Gentile powers is defended and preserved. —Isa. 11:11; Zech. 12:1-9.

The Purpose and Result.

16. The promised Davidic Kingdom.—Isa. 9:6-7; Luke 1: 32, 33.
17. The Kingdom set up at Jerusalem.—Isa. 24:23; Jer. 3: 17; Rev. 11:15.
18. The Lord shall be King over all the Earth.—Zech. 14:9.
19. He shall rule all Nations; with justice.—Psalm 2:8, 9; Rev. 2:27; 15:4.
20. The temple at Jerusalem rebuilt.—Ezek. 40 to 48 Chapters.
21. All shall go up annually to worship Him.—Zech. 14: 16, 17.
22. The Kingdoms of this world are become the Kingdoms of our Lord and His Christ.—Rev. 11:15.
23. The wolf shall dwell with the lamb.—Isa. 11:6.
24. The wilderness shall be a fruitful field.—Isa. 32:15 and the desert shall blossom as the rose.—Isa. 35:1-2.
25. Believers will reign with our Lord as Kings and Priests, during His millennial reign.—Rev. 1:6; 20:6.

"O Earth, Earth, Earth, hear the Word of the Lord!"—Jer. 22:29.

"And he that hath My Word, let him speak My Word faithfully."—Jer. 23:28.

A MEMORABLE CRUSADE

By the Reverend Nelson P. Dame

IN St. Mary's Church, at Fleeton, Virginia, the Rev. Harold B. Peters, rector, a most interesting Crusade came to a close on Sunday night, November 6th. There were two meetings each day, the congregations were large and most attentive, the singing was good, and a deep impression was made on the whole community. The subjects dwelt upon, both in the teaching and in the preaching, were "the great imperatives of the Christian religion", as suggested by the National Commission on Evangelism for the Bishops' Crusade; but especial emphasis was laid upon corporate, organized, united effort, rather than upon individual, isolated action in upholding the Christian principles of life and service in the community.

For instance, at the close of the Crusade the vestrymen and other men (all the men communicants on the point except two, who were prevented by illness) assembled Sunday afternoon at the Church and, after full discussion, expressed their convictions on the following subjects unanimously and enthusiastically. In the evening at the closing service, after renewing their baptismal vows on their knees, the whole congregation formally endorsed and adopted as their own this action of their vestrymen and the other men.

They were not saying that they individually did or did not do anything; but they were saying most emphatically that in their judgment and conviction these were principles of Christian conduct which our Lord lays down for all His people, for "all who profess and call themselves Christians", and that all the members of St. Mary's Church should, and would endeavor to, conform their lives to them. They were pledging the congregation to recognize and uphold and practice these principles of Christian living.

Minutes.

"We, the congregation of St. Mary's Church, Fleeton, Va., formally assembled, desire publicly to express these our convictions, as follows:

Baptismal Vows.

"When we became Christians in Baptism, we solemnly renounced all other leaders, 'the world, the flesh and the devil', and accepted our Lord Jesus Christ as the ruler and guide of our lives in all things, thoughts, words and deeds; and we declared our purpose, by God's help, to walk in His ways and keep His commandments, all the days of our life.

"Trusting us to keep our side of this covenant, He forgave us our sins, and made us partakers of the divine nature. We were grafted into Him, and became sharers of His Sonship to God. So we became, each one, "a member of Christ, the child of God and an inheritor of the Kingdom of Heaven", a member of the Royal Family of the Kingdom of God.

The Brotherhood.

"This congregation then is a Family of God, a Brotherhood, whose members are brothers and sisters in Christ.

"Therefore, we are persuaded that upon every member of this Church there rests the obligation to 'Love the Brotherhood', to 'Love the Brethren', that is "(a) To do everything in our power to serve and help this Church, this Family of God, and to avoid anything that could hurt it or bring discredit upon it.

"(b) And, to be thoughtful and considerate of, and kind and friendly to, every other member of this Church: to think no evil, to see no evil, to hear no evil, to speak no evil of any other member of this Family of God; but whatsoever things are lovely, creditable, praiseworthy in our brethren, to think on these things, and to speak of them to others.

The Body of Christ.

"When we became Christians, we became members of a company of believers, a congregation of His Church, the Body of Christ, through which He proposes to continue to carry on His gracious, kindly work for men; and to do even greater things through it than He did of old through His natural human body.

"He promises that whenever this body of His members assemble in His name, He will be in their midst: the Head and the Body will be in working relations.

"As He is then dependent on the congregation as His instrument, His body, for doing His work, He asks all His members to meet Him in the gathering of His people, and urges them not to forsake the assembling of themselves together. He asks each one of us to 'Hear the Church' as His messenger, and to 'obey those in authority over us in the Lord'.

"Therefore, we are persuaded that upon every member of this Church there rests the obligation

"(a) To meet our Lord and our brethren in the regular services of their Church, whenever it is possible to do so, and to allow no claims of home or hospitality, of business or pleasure, to take precedence of His claims upon us, to keep us away.

"(b) To kneel down on both knees in the prayers in the Church, as she asks her people to do.

"(c) To say the 'Amen' aloud at the end of the prayers, as the Church requires, and

"(d) To take our part in the public worship as far as we can, as the Church prescribes.

"Take No Thought."

"Our Lord has assured His people that no real or permanent evil shall ever come to them or to those near and dear to them. He warns them that things may look dark to them, and seem to go against this promise of His; but He says they will never be really dark or disprove His word. He asks them, therefore, to trust Him, to cast all their care upon Him who so loves and cares for them, and to let joy and gladness fill their hearts and shine in their faces, to let the peace of God keep their hearts and minds.

"Therefore, we are convinced that it is all wrong for any member of this Family of God to worry or fret, to be anxious or fearful, to whine or complain, to grumble or grouch about anything, under any circumstances. And we urge our brethren never thus to sin against our Lord, to shame Him before the world, and to drive people away from Him as such conduct does.

"First Be Reconciled."

"Our Lord has said, 'If thou bring thy gift to the altar' (confession, prayer, praise, offering of any kind), 'and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee, leave there thy gift before the altar and go thy way: first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift'. He is here saying very clearly that if any difference arises between any two members of this Family of God, the matter should be settled at once. It must not be allowed to fester, and the ill feeling bring discredit and shame to our Lord, or hinder His work. We are convinced that it is all wrong that ill feeling should ever be allowed to exist among any of our members, or that one member should fail to speak to any other member on account of ill feeling between them.

"Tell It to the Church."

"Our Lord says, 'If thy brother sin against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone. If he hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother. But if he will not hear thee, take one or two others with thee and tell him again. If he will not hear them, then tell it to the Church. And if he refuses to hear the Church, let him be as a heathen man and a publican. Verily I say unto you, whosesoever sins ye remit they are remitted, and whosesoever sins ye retain they are retained'.

"We are convinced, not only that all differences between members of the Family of God should be settled as soon as possible, but that they should be settled in the way that our Lord here prescribes; not before the courts, but before the Church: the person who takes offense, who feels hurt or aggrieved, taking the first step towards reconciliation."

A LESSON FOR TO-DAY.

Rev. L. R. Combs, Lancaster, Va.

The cost of building the tabernacle in the wilderness is as follows: The gold required was 29 talents and 730 shekels. A heavy talent of gold is valued at $29,085; a heavy shekel was $9.69. A light gold talent was $14,542; a light shekel was $4.85.

Amount of silver required was 100 talents and 1,775 shekels. The heavy silver talent amounted to $1,940.00; the light talent was $970.00. The heavy silver shekel equals $0.64.6; the light shekel, $0,32.3.

Assuming that the heavy talents were used we have the cost in silver and gold, $1,044,692.45; if the light talent, $522,826.40.

We have not estimated the 70 talents and 2,400 shekels of brass, nor the lumber, skins, linen, wool, gems and labor; but all of this was given by the 600,000 people who but a short while ago were slaves in Egypt.

The explanation: There were no speakers sent out to conduct an educational campaign; but "every one whose HEART stirred him up". It was, therefore, a very pronounced case of HEART trouble. There doesn't seem to be much of an epidemic to-day.

Consider another point: Moses had to restrain the people from giving; had to use force whether force of word or deed. How is it now? We train on them the big guns among the clergy and laity; but there is not much of a stampede. They soon grow weary in well-doing; it doesn't take much to stop them.

O Jesus, Thou art knocking,
And lo, that hand is scarred,
And thorns Thy brow encircled,
And tears Thy face have marred.
* * * * *
I died for you, my children,
And will ye treat me so?

HAVE PATIENCE WITH CHINA.

By Logan H. Roots, Bishop of Hankow.
(Dated September 20, 1927.)

Those who lead in the political thought of the time have apparently come to no agreement as to the fundamental principles which shall govern the revolution, and the friends of China are left with the impression that personal or factional interests are supreme and that some time will be required in which to reach such political cooperation between the vast and deeply divided sections of the nation as will bring into power any one government.

Banditry is more rife than for years; the opium evil grows without hindrance, drugging the bodies and consciences of increasing multitudes; education languishes; and the constructive energies of religion are for the moment rendered almost powerless by the campaign of hate and irreligion which has been fostered by the enemies of modern civilization both within and outside of China. Constructive foreign enterprises of all sorts, commercial and industrial and diplomatic as well as medical, educational and specifically religious, are suffering great loss; but such losses are small compared with the losses suffered in these fields by the Chinese themselves.

I suppose the most acute and widespread distress as I write today is that arising from the collapse of the paper currency which, until a few days ago, was the only medium of exchange allowed by the government to circulate. In April and even May this paper was at par. In July it was quoted at seventy cents for the dollar; a month ago it was two for one; yesterday it was five for one, and today it took six paper dollars to buy a silver dollar. Under the disillusionment of the present moment the natural reaction of even the best of men is to give up hope, identifying the spirit of modern China, or the nationalist movement with some one leader, or group of leaders, or party, and when that leader or group or party proves false or corrupt, to conclude that all is lost.

I write these lines primarily for foreign friends of China, particularly Americans; but I believe my plea to "'Have Patience with China", is one which should be heeded by every friend of the nation, foreign or Chinese. I share the disappointment and chagrin of almost all the Chinese I know at the failures, especially the moral failures, which are besetting the national movement in spheres where a few months ago success was confidently anticipated. But I venture the opinion that in spite of these failures there is no sufficient reason for despair, but rather there are many sound reasons for hope. Some of these reasons are as follows:

a. The nationalist movement is far too deep and powerful for any leader or group or party to express or embody it adequately. It will ultimately require, as in the case of every other nation, at least two political parties for its adequate expression; and the failure of any one party only means that another party will soon arise which we may hope will represent the nation better.

b. Extreme anti-foreign and anti-Christian feeling and agitation which have marred and weakened the movement in the past are subsiding. They have done a certain amount of good in chastening the spirit of the foreign nations and also of the Christian forces, inducing wholesome self-criticism and needed changes in attitude and policy. But their extreme forms have been due to artificial stimulus which is now being removed, and the natural recognition of merit irrespective of nationality is finding expression again.

c. The soundness of the nation's conscience is being shown even now. Specious leaders, foreign or Chinese, are being detected and discredited, one after another, at the bar of national opinion. The fact that some eighty Boone students, the higher classes of Boone Middle School and College being closed for the present term, have found their way to Shanghai College, a foreign and a Christian institution, in spite of whatever prejudice has existed against foreigners and against Christianity in the recent past, is also a case in point.

d. Mechanical devices, like scientific accounting and auditing, are being gradually applied, and will help China to be honest as they already help foreign nations. These are recent discoveries, and are being recognized as of immense assistance to public as well as private integrity, even in the handling of Church funds.

e. Above all, the Christian movement in China is showing signs of new life. These who know it best are sure it would not die out, even if it were deprived of all help from abroad. But it is showing its characteristic inner vitality in the face of adverse conditions and persecution. It is discriminating between pauperizing and constructive help from abroad, and is welcoming in manly fashion the help which will still stimulate and build it up; while at the same time the foreign part of the movement is striving more earnestly than ever before to reorganize and more thoroughly to Christianize its contributions of both money and personnel—lest it lose both its own soul and the soul of the people it would save.

In view of these facts, therefore, let no friend of China, Chinese or foreigner, lose hope for this suffering nation. Remember how marvelously God has had patience with us, and let us "Have Patience with China".

In a cable from Shanghai dated November 7, Dr. Wood reports: "Situation is quiet. Officials and people are friendly. All well."

CHUNGJU.

In addition to the Chungju dispensary, the American nurse and Korean physicians, with a druggist, have been holding dispensaries in two large market towns. The popularity of these dispensaries is shown by the number of people who sought their doors during the August rainy season when they had to be closed. "When are they going to open again?" was the common question. September found these centers of Christian influence open and ready to help body and soul.

Two years ago a horribly dirty leper came to a missionary's door for alms. He received travel expenses and a letter of introduction—containing a promissory note—to the leper asylum at Kwangju.

Recently a clean Korean of average good looks, with one of the most sympathetic and capable pastor's wives missionary's door to say that he was that man on his way back home and that he stopped en route to express his gratitude. He drew down his stockings to show where the numerous ulcers had been—now only scars. No ordinary observer would suspect that he had ever been a leper.

He said: 'Not only for the healing of my body am I thankful, but I found the Saviour at the asylum, am cleansed from sin as well, and am returning home to teach all the lepers I meet how to be cured and to tell my people of the Gospel." Taking a good bundle of leaflets he started homeward. Pray that he may never lose his gratitude to God and never have any return of leprosy of soul or body.—Korean Broadcasts.

THE PHILIPPINES.

A financial statement from the Philippines, as of September 15, shows that St. Luke's Church, Manila, the Church of the Resurrection and Easter School, Baguio, and the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, Sagada (including Besao), have already considerably overpaid their missionary apportionment for 1927.

IOLANI SCHOOL.

Iolani School for boys, in Honolulu, has started the new year in its long awaited, desperately needed, new quarters. Not including fifteen more immigrant students to come directly from the Orient, the enrollment had reached 278, divided racially as follows: Chinese, 116; Japanese, 111; part Hawaiian, 25; Korean, 13; white (i. e., "Caucasian"), 7; Filipino, 2; Portuguese, 4. Born in Hawaii, 176.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

THE "CATHOLIC" PARTY.

Mr. Editor:

With regard to the little pamphlet I wrote during the last Christmas holidays, "Shall the Protestant Episcopal Church be Destroyed?" and which you kindly reviewed in a recent issue of your paper your subscribers may be interested in reading a letter just received from a lady in California, which is illustrative of many communications coming to me from various parts of the country relative to the attempt of the "Catholic" party in the Church to overturn its doctrine, discipline and worship. I omit the name and address of the writer, as I have no authority to publish these without her permission.

"————————, Cal., Oct. 26, 127.

Mr. C. E. Marsilliot,
Memphis, Tenn.

Dear Sir:

My son received your pamphlet, and I am enclosing money order for fifty copies of the same. I want to distribute them to some friends who are ignorant of what is going on and the danger the Protestant Episcopal Church is in.

If the 'Catholic' party succeeds, I think I shall put my membership in another Church, or no Church at all.

Respectfully,

————————————."

May it not be well for Bishops, Clergy and laity, before they vote at the coming General Convention to discard the Articles of Religion and surrender the guidance of the Church to the "Catholic" party, to pause and consider whether or not this lady may express the sentiment of a very large portion, if not the majority, of the membership of the Protestant Episcopal Church?

Bishops and Clergy are necessarily aware of the fact that not five per cent of the laity are aware of the proposal to repudiate the Articles of Religion and of the program of the "Catholic" party to drag into this Church the Roman doctrines and practices which these Articles expressly disapprove. This being true, it is difficult for the laity to understand why Bishops and Clergy do not candidly and frankly tell their people from the chancel and in Diocesan publications of these proposals, in order that those in the pew may be fully advised in the premises and be thereby enabled to act intelligently in the selection of delegates to their respective Diocesan Conventions, and which Diocesan Conventions, in turn, elect representatives to the General Convention.

If, through lack of information on the part of the laity, the "Catholic" party succeeds in its designs, it is inevitable that knowledge of what has transpired will ultimately filter through to the membership of the Church; and, when that occurs, it is not difficult to imagine what will happen.

If it be the idea of Bishops and Clergy that, through some sort of a miraculous legerdemain, there will be a compromise which will avoid a conflict between the Protestant-Episcopalian and "Catholic" parties, they have only to analyze the situation far enough to realize that the two schools of thought are absolutely irreconcilable, which fact is openly admitted by "Catholics" themselves, and to read the pronouncements of "Catholic" leaders to the effect that there will be no compromise on their part

As so ably pointed out by Dr. Hart, of Chattanooga, in a communication to your paper last spring, if the Church is converted into something utterly alien to its present Constitution and doctrinal position, as the Church has declared the same to be, something which the great majority of its people do not want, may not Bishops and Clergy, because of their omission to tell the people what is proposed, find themselves with a Church reduced to a pitifully weak membership or with no Church at all?

No proposition is worthy of acceptance by the Church which cannot bear the searchlight of publicity, nor can there be peace and harmony in the Church unless its people are informed of and acquiesce in its legislation.

The writer has no disposition to undertake to instruct either Bishops or Clergy as to the performance of their duties, and the purpose of this communication is to bring to their attention the fact that the people can be trusted to express their views in the right and proper manner if they are fully advised and to loyalty support both Bishops and Clergy in standing squarely by the Constitution of the Church. No Bishop or clergyman need have the slightest fear that the great majority of his people will not back him to the limit in upholding "The faith once delivered to the Saints" as this Church has declared the same to be.

Let's tell the people in the pews all about it and then let them say what they want. If the Church atempts to force upon them something they do not want and will not have, the result is not difficult to foresee.

CONCERNING EVOLUTION.

Mr. Editor:

See Dean Inge in Evening Standard (London) of October 26, 1927. He interests me. He is so cocksure of being right as to Evolution. One would think the last word had been said.

Yet Evolution, teaching that man has come from the lowest of creation up to our present state, and will go on and on up to perfection, has no room in it for Eden and the "fall of man"—no "Adam's lost race"—no "fountain filled with blood" needed. "Christian Evolution" is a misnomer, like Christian skepticism or Christian atheism.

APPROVED.

Mr. Editor:

I enjoy each splendid copy of the paper and wish to get it promptly each week.

The "Southern Churchman" is a valuable contribution to the Church in these troubled times, and am in hearty sympathy with its teachings and policies.

Rev. John L. Showell.

VALUABLE PAPER.

Mr. Editor:

I am still in receipt of your very valuable paper, and would not willingly do without it, so am writing to ask that you change my address on the label from Racine, W. Va., to 308 Elm Street, Charleston, W. Va., beginning with the issue for November 26, 1927.

With warmest regards and all good wishes.

(Signed) C. M. Campbell.

FIRM FOR THE FAITH.

Mr. Editor:

I send you a cheque for one year's subscription to your admirable paper, because I find that you stand firmly for the faith that was once for all delivered to the Saints.

A courageous defense of truth is the best antidote for error, and the world will be won by those who are loyal to the doctrine of Christ "as this Church hath received the same".

Bishop of Albany.

Book Reviews

"A YOUTH'S HISTORY OF THE CIVIL WAR." By Rushmore G. Horton.

A remarkable book has come to light, a book that served its term in the prison of libraries obscured by the multiplicity of larger volumes, and which now appears in a revised edition, "A Youth's History of the Great Civil War", suited in its style for youth and adult alike. It has a threefold merit: Truthfulness, simplicity and an unbiased author, Rushmore G. Horton, of New York, a man of literary taste, who lived, labored and died north of Mason and Dixon's Line.

The presentation of the issues which led to the War Between the States is clear, succinct and manifestly correct—a body of truth in a nutshell In focussing the responsibility for the war, the author has indulged no personal bitterness, but has brought forward an array of authenticated facts which make their own appeal. The one chapter, "The First Gun of Sumter", is well worth the price of the book.

The South has waited patiently for the release of the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth and will welcome this vindication pronounced by a Northern man moved by a spirit of fairness and untrammeled by Southern influence. A relentless error long in the saddle has been unhorsed, and truth, hitherto "crushed to earth", has come to its rightful sovereignty on the throne.

By bringing out this revised edition, the editors, M. D. Carter and Lloyd T Everett, have performed an invaluable service for the North as well as for the South. Happily the book is dedicated to the "Copperheads of the North"—"Copperhead" being originally intended as a term of reproach, but which has become a badge of honor. Among those who stand for right rather than might the book is destined to be as popular in one section as another, in the North as in the South. In both sections already scholars and critics have announced unqualified indorsement.

The mechanical part of the work has been well executed by the Southern Publishing Company, Dallas, Texas, where the book is on sale at one dollar and twenty-five cents.

Girls' Friendly.

The fiftieth anniversary of the Girls' Friendly Society in America was observed by a series of important meetings in Boston, November 2 to 6, in connection with the triennial convention of the G. F. S. National Council. The meetings took place in the Hotel Statler. There were more than 1,200 registered delegates and visitors, from every part of the country. Virginia and Southern Virginia, Washington, Maryland, Lexington, Tennessee, Oklahoma and West Texas were among the Southern dioceses represented.

Although this anniversary occasion gave every reason for looking backward, the whole program centered about the theme of the "Widening Horizons" of the future. This was the point of view of Bishop Oldham's stirring address on "Christianizing International Relations", and of the talks by the Rev. Francis Cotter, of Wuchang, and Deaconess Newell, formerly of Mexico, at a missionary luncheon presided over by Miss Helen Brent. "The Horizon of Tomorrow" was the title of the great pageant written and directed by Miss Era Betzner, of New York, in which seven hundred and fifty persons from seventy-two parishes in four dioceses took part, portraying the life of a girl as she goes from childhood to youth and womanhood. "Youth Scans the Horizon" was the subject of a big meeting held by the young members of the Council, where addresses were made by three young girls, one of them Miss Winifred Leyland of St. Paul's, Newport News, Va. Dr. Miriam Van Waters of the Los Angeles Juvenile Court, a distinguished student of present-day problems, spoke at this meeting.

One of the most important events was a pilgrimage to St. Anne's Church, Lowell, on Sunday morning, for a special service in memory of Elizabeth Edson who, just fifty years ago, organized the first G. F. S. branch in this country. She was a quiet, retiring person, but the work she started with twelve members has grown to have 60,000 members, in 1,200 parish branches.

Other important parts of the program were: Morning meditations, led by Dr. Adelaide Case, of New York; discussion groups in which the large convention was divided into sixteen small sections to consider problems reported by every section of the country on the subjects of finance and membership; another series of four discussion groups on present-day problems in connection with religious, social, and international questions, and problems of leadership, as these all affect girls and young women.

There were daily celebrations of the Holy Communion in Trinity Church and elsewhere. On Sunday at eight, Trinity Church was thronged for the Corporate Communion, at which Bishop Slattery was the celebrant; ;and at four that afternoon every gallery was filled for the closing festival service, at which Bishop Murray preached.

The Girls' Friendly Society Record should be read for important official acts of the business sessions. The new national president is Miss Margaret M. Lukens, of Conshohocken, Penn., formerly G. F. S. vice-president for the Province of Sewanee. The new vice-president for the Third Province is Miss Julia J. Cunningham, of Baltimore. Work toward the National G. F. S. center in Washington is progressing, and a house has been bought for it.

Report From the National Council.

Twenty Dioceses and Districts on Honor Roll.

Here they are: Porto Rico, Haiti, Delaware, Maryland, Southwestern Virginia, Alabama, Kentucky, Canal Zone, Ohio, North Dakota, South Dakota, North Texas, Alaska, Arizona, Honolulu, Philippines, Utah, Cuba, Liberia, Mexico.

The total receipts from Dioceses and Districts are $74,111.97 behind last year.

Instead of gaining in October we lost about $24,000. Please buy some nonskid chains and then step on the gas.

Palestine Museum Offered Big Sum.

Official announcement of a donation of $2,000,000 by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., for the establishment of a museum for archaelogical research at Jerusalem, is expected to be made by the Palestine government shortly.

It is understood that there are no strings tied to the Rockefeller donation such as caused the Egyptian government to refuse Mr. Rockefeller's offer of $10,000,000 for a similar museum at Cairo.

However, the donation is contingent upon the Palestine government's donation of the land site for the museum and an undertaking to complete the building within two years.

It was believed that James Henry Breasted, noted Chicago Egyptologist, was largely responsible for Mr. Rockefeller's donation of the fund.

The C. P. C.

By means of gifts received for the purpose the Church Periodical Club (Twenty-two West Forty-eighth Street, New York) last year was able to send 44,000 Christmas cards to chaplains, missionaries and others who in some cases could provide little or no other Christmas cheer for those in their charge. A gift of four dollars provides a thousand of these cards.

An interested visitor at the first Periodical Club meeting this year was Mrs. Frank Shepherd of Fordham, N. Y., who has passed her ninetieth birthday and who was one of the first group of eight who met to organize the C. P. C. forty years ago this January.

Evangelistic Mission.

Mr. E. C. Mercer, the noted evangelist, will hold a mission at Grace Church, Petersburg, from November 20 to 25.

Mr. Mercer's work was begun in 1904. His life experience and other Christian addresses have been given in many of our leading Protestant Churches; also in the leading colleges and universities of America, in over 3,000 high schools, over 3,000 manufacturing plants, before boards of trade, chambers of commerce, in theatres, jails, prisons, rescue missions, Y. M. C. A.'s, Rotary, Kiwanis, and other clubs. Over 4,000,000 persons of all classes and creeds have heard him, over 3,000 Bishops, ministers and leading laymen and laywomen endorse his work. He is doing a tremendous constructive work among the young people of our nation and every community needs his message and help.

Silver Alms Basin is Presented to Church.

The semi-annual presentation of the United Thank Offering took place at St. John's Episcopal Church, Tappahannock, on Tuesday afternoon, November 8, at which time a handsome silver alms basin was presented to the church by the Woman's Auxiliary in memory of the first president, Mrs. Annie Mason Brockenbrough.

Mission at Epiphany Chapel.

The Rev. J. J. D. Hall has conducted a mission during the week of November 13 at Epiphany Chapel, with three services every day. Mr. Hall is a general missioner and for a number of years conducted the Galilee Episcopal Mission in Philadelphia.

Mass Meeting.

A mass meeting in the interest of missions will be held under the auspices of the Laymen's Service Association in Washington Auditorium on the evening of December 4, as a part of the program of the Field Department of the Diocese. This will be the third service of the kind in the Diocese of Washington, and, as usual, is held near the time of the year when pledges are being made for the year's work.

Memorial Services for Woodrow Wilson.

Services in memory of Woodrow Wilson were held in Bethlehem Chapel on Armistice Day. A spray of lilies was placed upon the tomb of President Wilson by Mary Faith McAdoo, a young granddaughter. The Bishop of Washington conducted the service and was assisted by Dr. James H. Taylor, the pastor and warm friend of the great War President. Bishop Freeman, in a short address, emphasized the ideals for which Woodrow Wilson lived and died and the need for greater remembrance of these ideals.

Funeral Services for Senor Don Francisco Sanchez-Latour.

Washington Cathedral was seen in its national and international aspect recently when impressive funeral services, attended by President and Mrs. Coolidge, Cabinet officers, members of the diplomatic corps and high government officials were held November 12 in Bethlehem Chapel for Senor Don Francisco Sanchez-Latour, late Minister of Guatemala to the United States. Immediately following the services the body was taken to the Chapel of St. Joseph of Arimathea and placed in the crypt there, to remain until the light cruiser U. S. S. Memphis takes it to Guatemala for burial. This is the first time the chapel has been used.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

A Great Conference of Diocesan Clergy.

On November 10 and 11 the clergy of the diocese, at the call of Bishop Jett, assembled in the Parish House of St. John's Church, Roanoke, for a general conference on various parochial and diocesan problems. Twenty-nine persons were in attendance.

The first session of the conference was held Thursday evening. Friday morning there was a celebration of Holy Communion in St. John's Church. Following this the conference was resumed in the parish house.

In the first resolution adopted the members of the conference expressed their sympathy and affection for the Rev. G. Otis Mead, rector of Christ Church, Roanoke, and the hope that he may soon be restored to health and strength again. Mr. Mead has been compelled, on account of illness, to take a vacation from his parochial work and is at present in Florida.

Among the subjects discussed were the following:

The conference took up the preparation for the Every Member Canvass. Great interest was manifested in the plans outlined by Bishop Jett for the establishment of a sort of diocesan industrial high school in the southwest part of the diocese.

The clergy approved most heartily a plan proposed by Bishop Jett for keeping open various vacant churches in the diocese. It is the Bishop's idea to place each of these churches under the charge of some nearby rector with a view to having at least one service a month conducted by the rector himself and other services as often as possible by lay readers, etc. In addition it is his hope that a clergyman, when thus taking charge of a vacant church, in addition to the work of his own parish, will do everything in his power to see that the Sunday School is carried on with the utmost efficiency.

The conference expressed its approval of the splendid work done last year by the Diocesan Commission on Evangelism, of which the Rev. John J. Gravatt, Jr., of Staunton, is Chairman, in promoting the Bishops' Crusade throughout the diocese. The conference went on record pledging the support of Southwestern Virginia to whatever plans may be adopted for the coming year by the National Commission on Evangelism.

There was some discussion of the "College of Preachers", inaugurated at the Cathedral in Washington, and a somewhat similar undertaking at Sewanee, and the hope was expressed that it might be found possible for some of the ministers in this diocese to attend the session in Washington each year.

Also the thought was expressed that it would be most helpful to the work of the Church throughout the diocese if a concerted movement might be made for the establishment of additional chapters of St. Andrew's Brotherhood and Daughters of the King, with a view to placing a distinct emphasis on personal evangelism.

Conference of Women's Church Organizations.

A united devotional service and conference of all women's Church organizations in this diocese was held Tuesday, November 8, afternoon and night, in Holy Trinity Church, Rittenhouse Square, Philadelphia. The Rt. Rev. Charles Lewis Slattery, Bishop of Massachusetts, and Bishop Garland made addresses.

The women's Church organizations taking part in the day's program, included Girls' Friendly Society, Diocesan Altar Guild, Daughters of the King, Church Mission of Help, Department of Religious Education, Churchwoman's Club, Church Periodical Club, St. Barnabas' Guild, and all parish branches of the Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary.

Convention of Diocesan Young People's Fellowship.

The fourth annual convention of the Diocesan Young People's Fellowship met November 7 at the Church of the Atonement, West Philadelphia. Many delegates representing the parish young people's organizations were present. The business session was followed by a supper, at which Bishop Garland and the Rev. Charles B. Ackley, rector of St. Mary's Church, New York, were among the speakers.

Memorial Church of the Good Shepherd Dedicated.

On October 13 five Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church took part in the consecration of the new Memorial Church of the Good Shepherd, Oak Road, Germantown, and in the dedication in the afternoon of the new parish house.

The new buildings are regarded as among the finest examples of Colonial brick architecture to be found in the United States. The structures with their equipment and the ground are said to cost in the neighborhood of $350,000.

In addition to Bishop Garland, those who participated in the exercises were the Rt. Rev. P. M. Rhinelander, formerly Bishop of Pennsylvania and now attached to the National Cathedral at Washington; the Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, Bishop of Delaware;; the Rt. Rev. J. DeWolf Perry, Jr., Bishop of Rhode Island, and the Rt. Rev. Samuel B. Booth, Bishop Coadjutor of Vermont.

The Rev. William Y. Edwards, rector of the Good Shepherd Parish, members of the vestry and all parish organizations participated and clergy and communicants of many other Episcopal Parishes attended.

Bishop Perry was the preacher at the consecration service, and Bishop Booth delivered the address at the dedication of the parish house. Both are natives of Philadelphia and received their early religious training in the Sunday School of Calvary Church, Germantown, under the late Rev. J. DeWolf Perry, father of Bishop Perry.

The Good Shepherd was formerly a chapel of Calvary Church. About eight years ago Mr. Edwards took charge and in 1921 the Good Shepherd became a self-supporting parish. Until the congregation moved to the new church it worshipped in the old building on Midvale Avenue.

The new buildings and ground are the gift of the three sons of the late Henry W. Brown and Alice P. Brown as a memorial to their father and mother. Theodore E. Brown, the eldest, made the formal request for consecration, and Reynolds D. Brown, the youngest son, read the formal sentence of consecration. The other son, Henry I. Brown, is a vestryman of the church. The parish house was built by the congregation to conform to the architecture of the church.

The interior of the building is pure Colonial. The auditorium has a seating capacity of more than three hundred and is equipped with deep chancel and side chapel. The church is surmounted by a tower and a cross and a fine set of chimes. Both buildings are the work of Carl Ziegler, Philadelphia architect.

Annual Meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of this Diocese was held on November 9th at the Pro-Cathedral. Holy Communion was celebrated at half-past 11, at which the United Thank Offering was presented. There was an inspirational meeting afterwards, at which the speaker was Miss Sallie Deane, of Richmond, Va.

Y. P. S. L. Conference.

The Young People's Service League of the Diocese, under Mr. Henry T. Chinn as president, held a three-day conference the last of October. The general theme was "Worship". The conference terminated with a dinner at Memorial Parish House, at which time Bishop Helfenstein addressed the delegates.

Council of the Church.

The one hundred and first Council of the Church in Mississippi met in St. Andrew's Church, Jackson, October 18-21.

The delegates elected to the General Convention were the Rev. Walter B. Capers, II., St. Andrew's, Jackson; the Rev. Joseph Kuehnle, Trinity, Natchez; the Rev. Val Sessions from the Missionary Field, and the Rev. Chas. E. Woodson, Christ Church, Vicksburg.

The members of the Standing Committee were reelected—the Rev. Walter B. Capers, D. D., President.

The Council authorized the Executive Committee to erect a tablet in St. Andrew's Church, commemorative of the one hundred and first anniversary of the establishment of the Diocese of Mississippi.

As Chairman of the Diocesan Committee on Prayer Book Changes, the Rev. Dr. Capers presented the following report and resolution:

Your Committee on Prayer Book Changes begs leave to report that it has followed with interest the discussions and suggestions appearing from time to time in Church periodicals relating to the ratification at the next General Convention of certain changes in the Book of Common Prayer. In the judgment of your Committee "A Petition to the General Convention by some of the Children of the Church" covers the ground, and we, therefore, adopt it as our report to this Council. The Petition follows:

"A Petition to the General Convention by Some of the Children of the Church:

"The Resolution instituting the Revision of the Book of Common Prayer, now in progress, restricted the Commission charged with the responsibility of leadership in revision to 'necessary' amendments mainly for the enrichment of worship.

"(1) We recognize that the qualifying adjective 'necessary' is somewhat elastic, its interpretation varying with common use. We submit, however, that the change in 'The Order for the Ministration of the Lord's Supper or Holy Communion', by which change the Official Title and primary purpose of the Holy Office are made secondary does not fall under the term, 'necessary' changes, and that the omission of the word 'militant' does not.

"(2) We respectfully submit that Prayer for 'Christ's Church Militant' is vital, vigorous petition for the visible Church at work under the conditions of every-day experience; that the Commemoration of those departed is not less so, being a prayer for the living to remember in order to follow their good example.

"(3) And, therefore, should the Church desire further commemoration in 'Prayers for the Dead' these prayers should be separate from the present prayer for the Church Militant. The Book of Common Prayer being a Book of instruction as well as of worship, we would ask that such prayers be optional in public use as certainly they are in private, since to require their use would be to require instruction of young and old alike upon a sacred and mysterious subject not revealed in the Holy Scriptures.

"Useful and necessary as the employment of committee consideration and predigestion of proposed measures undoubtedly is, it is attended with this serious danger (especially in the vital matter of Revision of the Church's Standard of Worship and Doctrine and Instruction), viz., that as the protracted consideration (reaching over many years) proceeds, the report of the Committee comes less and less under review and the Prayer Book comes more and more under review; the laborious work of the Committee becomes more and more to be regarded as a final judgment, needing less and less of reason shown for its adoption while the judgment of others, often equally earnest students of the subjects, holding to the old and resisting the new proposals becomes more and more to be regarded as spontaneously expressed obstructing criticisms. In short the effect becomes to put the Old Prayer Book on the defense, and instead of the "proposed amendments' being required to be justified, the Standard Prayer Book is required to be justified. And for this unequal task, each speaker (in the House of Bishops certainly) was limited to three minutes time on each resolution to amend.

"(1) In calling attention to the "serious danger' attending the committee method of Revising the Prayer Book, we want to disclaim the faintest reflection upon our beloved, revered members of the Prayer Book Revision Commission. It is an inherent weakness in a method to which we call attention. We recognize the method to be necessary—in order that we fail neither to honor the ministers of the necessary method, our Commission, with deep gratitude; nor to honor the (shall we not say inspired) inheritance of many ages of the Church's Fellowship with the Holy Spirit of which the Prayer Book is the beautiful fruit.

"(2) Thus first, the radical proposal to change the distinct expression and declaration of the normal practice of the Family of God, the Church, whereby infants are by baptism regenerated in the family. This distinctive declaration of the normal life practice is removed when the Office for Baptism is proposed to replace the two distinctive Offices in the Prayer Book. We respectfully submit that the Covenant of God contemplates that in the Family of the Covenant, both in the Old Dispensation and in the New, the infants are the normal subjects of regeneration; the adults, subjects only through neglect or lack of opportunity in non-Christian lands will long continue, the Office for Adult Baptism should be retained, with changes as above.

"(3) We petition that 'A Form of Prayer and Thanksgiving to Almighty God' be retained as the distinctive Office that it now is. As it stands, it is both an Office of Thanksgiving and the clear, precise distinctive expression of the Church's spiritual relation to the Nation and to the Nation's life. At all times (particularly in eras of unusual lawlessness) the clear declaration of the Church's responsibility for the state's citizens and vital concern for her high spiritual contact with the state and loyal recognition of her corporate relation to national social life, the Thanksgiving Office is the one normal occasion upon which the Church awaits, and gladly recognizes, the Proclamation of the State."

Your Committee, while agreeing with the petition recited above, that the Catechism be kept where it is in the Book of Common Prayer, nevertheless, approves of the Offices of Instruction and feels they should be given a prominent place in the Prayer Book, perhaps, following the Catechism.

In the opinion of your committee, the Thirty-nine Articles should be retained in their present place in the Book of Common Prayer. The Thirty-nine Articles are only standards of doctrine for their general teaching, e. g., excluding Socinianism and Roman Catholicism. While the Nicean Creed sufficiently declares against Socinianism, there will be no adequate protest against Romanism in our official teaching, if the Thirty-nine Articles are dropped. As long as we have the Nicean Creed the Church can overlook cases of individualism whether individual's practice be right or wrong, for the official position of the Church is clearly anti-Socinian, and in the same way we can put up with many ritualistic preachers and teachings while we have the Thirty-nine Articles, and the Church's position is clear; but if we haul down the flag, then the official protest is done away and the preachers and teachings of the ritualists will have free course.

Therefore:

Resolved, that this Council adopt the report of the committee as an adequate expression of the Council's position on the further revision of the Book of Common Prayer. (Adopted.)

Calvary Episcopal Church a Singing Congregation.

The choir-master of Calvary Episcopal Church, Mr. John Bland, hopes that the choir itself will no longer be the feature of the service that it has been in the past, for he is working to make a singing congregation.

Sunday night, November 13, at the head of the chancel steps he gave lessons to the congregation in singing certain beautiful but less well known hymns. There is practically silence in the pews for many of the hymns. The temptation of a choir-master to discount congregational singing in order to feature the work of his choir, is great. There will be continued, of course, the anthems and the beautiful offertory for which Calvary choir is famous; but a singing congregation has not only the value of having a part in the music, but the fact of this contribution makes them somehow pray more deeply, and listen with a different attention to the lessons and sermons. Mr. Bland's interest in what goes on in the huge old building lies as definitely along spiritual lines as along musical lines, and there is a unity on the part of choir-master, organist, clergy and people that makes the services striking in their appeal.

New Holy Trinity House in St. James' Parish.

Plans for a new Holy Trinity House in St. James' Parish were made public with the awarding of contracts by the vestry of St. James' Church and the rector, the Rev. Dr. Frank Warfield Crowder, to the architect, Grosvenor Atterbury, and the contractors, Messrs. Jacob and Younge. The new building will adjoin the Church of the Holy Trinity, which is the daughter-church of St. James, on East Eighty-seventh Street, near Second Avenue. The Rev. Dudley S. Stark, vicar of Holy Trinity, said that the new building would provide living quarters for the curate, sexton, women-workers on the church staff, a library, offices, and a large, fully equipped choir room which will lead directly into the church. The new Trinity House is in memory of Charles E. Rhinelander, and is made possible by a legacy from his estate received by the vestry of St. James. The property on which the Church of the Holy Trinity stands was originally a part of the old Rhinelander farm purchased in 1794 by William Rhinelander along the shores of the East River.

Seventy-fifth Anniversary.

In October, 1852, seventy-five years ago, St. Ann's Church for the Deaf was started in New York City by the Rev. Thomas Gallaudet. It was the first attempt to organize the deaf in a congregation by themselves under the authority of the Church. This seventy-fifth anniversary was fittingly observed by a special service at which Bishop Manning preached. The Church's work for the deaf is now carried on by about fifteen missionaries, whose great fields stretch clear across the country.

Delaware Clergy Meet the Challenge.

Realizing that the present situation in the Church challenges the support of the whole body of clergy and laity in the nation-wide every member canvass this fall, the clergy of Delaware devoted the November meeting of the Clericus to a discussion of plans and methods. Use of the tried methods set forth by the Field Department of the National Council, with flexibility in their application to the individual parish, was the policy agreed upon.

Bishop Cook opened the Clericus with the Holy Communion, assisted by the Rev. P. L. Donaghay, rector of St. Anne's Church, Middletown, where the meeting was held on November 8. The discussion was led by the Bishop and by Dr. F. M. Kirkus and the Rev. R. W. Trapnell, of the local diocese, and the Rev. E. N. Schmuck, of the Field Department of the National Council.

The clergy recommended that the Executive Council of the diocese adopt the same budget as last year with larger consideration for the employment of personnel, rather than provision for fabric, which has received generous reinforcement during the past few years. The rectors present accepted, in behalf of their parishes, the quotas assigned to them. Delaware is as usual on the honor list of dioceses which have paid the apportionments due at this date on the national budget, and at the same time has maintained a satisfactory working balance in the diocesan treasury.

Rt. Rev. W. A. Guerry, D. D., Bishop.

Annual Council of Colored Churchmen.

The Eighteenth Annual Council of Colored Churchmen in this diocese was held in St. Andrew's Church, Charleston County, October 27-30, inclusive. The Rev. George E. Howell, of Epiphany, Summerville, preached the sermon to the ladies of the Woman's Auxiliary on the evening of the twenty-seventh. Mrs. E. L. Baskervill presided over the meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary.

On Friday, the twenty-eighth, Holy Communion was celebrated for the Woman's Auxiliary, the Rt. Rev. H. B. Delany, D. D., being the celebrant. The Interdenominational Ministers' Union of Charleston was represented by the President, the Rev. C. S. Ledbetter, of Plymouth Congregational Church.

Saturday, the twenty-ninth, Bishop Guerry having arrived, after celebration of the Holy Communion, at which he was celebrant and speaker, the regular work of the Council was taken up. A secretary and treasurer were elected, roll was called and a quorum being present, the Council was formally declared open. Among the first things done by the Council was the endorsement of Bishop Guerry's plans for "Church Unity", as laid before them in his address.

Bishop Delany made his report of work done in the diocese.

Archdeacon Baskervill also made his report, which showed the need of finances, how finances were obtained, and how disbursed.

Bishop Guerry was the preacher at the morning service Sunday. Prof. J. E. Blanton of Voorhees N. and I. School, Denmark, S. C., and Bishop Delany at the night service. Others who visited and addressed the Council were Dr. R. S. Wilkinson, of State College, Orangeburg, and Dr. H. U. Seabrook, of Charleston.

After services Sunday evening, the Council adjourned to meet next year at Calvary, Charleston.

Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop.

Pilgrimage to St. Thomas' Church.

The annual pilgrimage to St. Thomas' Church, Bath, was conducted on Armistice Day. Bishop Darst preached, and celebrated the Holy Communion. Music was furnished by the choir of St. Peter's Church, Washington, N. C. St. Thomas' Church building is the oldest in North Carolina, having been erected in 1734, and by generous contributions from friends is being conditioned for the future.

The Wilmington Convocation, which met in St. Mary's, Kinston, October 31, reelected the Rev. Alexander Miller, as Dean, and the Rev. George W. Lay, D. C. L., as Secretary-Treasurer.

The Rev. G. F. Cameron, of Ayden, conducted a ten-day mission in St. Andrew's Church, Columbia, N. C., beginning October 20. At the closing service Bishop Darst preached, and the rector, the Rev. Charles E. Williams, presented five candidates for Confirmation.

Death of the Rev. Preston Barr.

The Rev. Preston Barr, non-parochial retired minister of the Diocese of Western Massachusetts, died of heart failure November 7, 1927, Clinton, N. C. The suddenness of Mr. Barr's death was occasioned by excitement resulting from a fire which slightly damaged the home in which he was a guest.

Mr. Barr had supplied in several parishes in this diocese, including St. Philip's Church, Southport, and St. Paul's Church, Clinton. Because of his ability as a preacher and his pronounced Christian character and courtesy, he greatly endeared himself to the people wherever he ministered. He had been in poor health for some time.

Annual Meeting of the Diocesan Young People's Association.

The Young People of Holy Trinity Parish, Danville, of which the Rev. Mart Gary Smith is rector, were hosts to the annual meeting of the Episcopal Young People's Association on Saturday and Sunday, November 4 and 5.

Among the leaders taking part in the conference were the Rev. Jerry Wallace, Chairman of the Department of Religious Education; the Rev. and Mrs. Mart Gary Smith; the Rev. Herbert L. Miller, rector of Emmanuel Memorial Church, Champaign, and the Rev. Morton C. Stone, Chaplain at the University of Illinois.

Officers for the new year were elected, and Emmanuel Memorial Church, Champaign, was decided upon as the next place of meeting.

Quiet Day.

The Rev. Charles Mercer Hall, rector of Trinity Church, Bridgeport, Conn., has been in the diocese recently, holding a Quiet Day in St. Paul's, Springfield, of which the Rev. Edward Haughton is rector, and is at the present time conducting a week's mission in St. Paul's Church, Alton, of which the Rev. Robert H. Atchison is rector.

Parochial Missions.

The Rev. Andrew O. Dodge, one of the Church's Missionaries within the Archdeaconry of Cairo has arranged with Bishop White for the conducting of Parochial Missions this month in St. John's Church, Mt. Carmel, and St. John's Church, Albion. These missions are in the nature of an endeavor to reach people who are not now associated or connected with the Episcopal Church, and extensive preparations have been made and it is confidently expected that a number of new people will be brought into the Church through this effort.

Advent Offering.

The Advent Offering of the boys and girls of the diocese is to be given this year towards the wiping out of the debt on the new building at Herrin. The Church is pointing with considerable pride these days to its work in Williamson County, in which Herrin and Marion, two Church centers, are located. A resident clergyman and a United Thank Offering Worker are busy every day and results are coming.

Every Member Canvass.

Preparations for the Every Member Canvass are going forward in most of the parishes and missions of the diocese and in most cases the canvass will be held on Sunday, November 20, as suggested by the National Church.

Rt. Rev. L. W. Burton, D. D., Bishop.

Ninety-fifth Anniversary of the Consecration of Bishop Smith.

On the afternoon of Sunday, October 30, in the Frankfort Cemetery, at the grave of Bishop B. B. Smith, the first Bishop of Kentucky, the Rt. Rev. L. W. Burton, D. D., held a memorial service commemorating the ninety-fifth anniversary of the consecration to the Episcopate of Bishop Smith.

In August, 1830, the Rev. Benjamin Bosworth Smith was unanimously called to the rectorship of Christ Church, Lexington.

The Diocese of Kentucky had been organized in 1829 by a meeting in Lexington of two presbyters, one deacon and sixteen lay delegates..

On June 10, 1831, at the third Convention of the Diocese of Kentucky, held in Louisville, the new rector of Christ Church, Lexington, was elected Bishop of the Diocese.

At that time the Bishop-elect was in his thirtieth year, having been born at Bristol, R. I., June 13, 1794. He graduated from Brown University in 1816; and was ordained to the priesthood in 1818.

Dr. Smith was consecrated Bishop of Kentucky in St. Paul's Church, New York City, on October 31, 1832. The Presiding Bishop at the consecration was the Rt. Rev. Dr. William White, of Pennsylvania. The co-consecrators were the Rt. Rev. Thomas Church Brownell, the third Bishop of Connecticut, and the Rt. Rev. Henry Ustick Onderdonk, then assistant Bishop of Pennsylvania.

Bishop Smith served in the episcopate a total of fifty-one years and seven months, and as Presiding Bishop a total of sixteen years, four months and twenty-two days.

From 1840 to 1842 he served the State of Kentucky as her third Superintendent of public instruction.

He was also an artist. He planned the church at Harrodsburg, Kentucky, after an English church. He also carved the chancel furniture. From England he brought the model for the church at Cynthiana, Kentucky. A mantel in the dining room and part of the wood work in a bay window in the orphanage of Ascension Church, Frankfort, were carved by the Bishop.

Bethel Church, Iron Mountain.

A service of great significance to this Diocese and, no doubt, to the Church at large, took place upon November 8, when the Rt. Rev. R. L. Harris, D. D., dedicated Bethel Episcopal Church, Iron Mountain, Mich. The church had been closed for several weeks for extensive repairs, together with the installation of a pipe organ and an altar. Bethel Church is composed of Swedish people, and services are conducted in Swedish and in English. It was originally a Swedish Lutheran body, coming under the jurisdiction of our Bishop in 1923. Today the communicant list is about three hundred.

In addition to the service of dedication of the church and improvements, the Rev. W. Blomquist was instituted as rector by Bishop Harris. In the congregation were many who could understand little or no English, and of the ten clergy present only two understand Swedish. Every one of the clergy present took part in some portion of the services. Notices were given in Swedish and in English. The Bishop conducted his part in English and the Rev. W. Blomquist responded in English, but all the prayers by Mr. Blom-

Collect for Sunday Next Before Advent

Stir up, we beseech Thee, O Lord, the wills of Thy faithful people, that they, plenteously bringing forth the fruit of good works, may by Thee be plenteously rewarded; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Collect for Thanksgiving Day.

O Most Merciful Father, Who hast blessed the labors of the husbandman in the returns of the fruits of the earth; we give Thee humble and hearty thanks for this Thy bounty; beseeching Thee to continue Thy loving kindness to us, that our land may still yield her increase to Thy glory and our comfort; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

We Thank Thee, Lord.

We thank Thee, Lord, for nature's store,
Unfailing as in all the years
Since man, with mingled hopes and fears,
His needs to heaven first upbore.

We thank Thee, Lord, for human love!
How pure the joy it sheds abroad!
By this we prove us kin to God,
And rise our baser selves above.

We thank Thee, Lord, for what Thou art—
Unchanging, though all else be changed;
In pity not to be estranged
That frailty bar us from Thy heart.

Father, we cast ourselves on Thee!
Forgive the weakness of our praise;
Oh, help us in the coming days
More worthy of Thy love to be!

—Selected.

Let Us Come Before His Face With Thanksgiving.

Resolve to look for causes of thankfulness. "Seek, and ye shall find," is a principle as well as a promise. Look for trouble, for sin, shame, ash-heaps, broken dishes, you will find them. Look for goodness, good people, good apples —you will find them.

The Pharisees saw in Matthew a despised publican and their pride was gratified. Jesus saw in Matthew a man, a possibility, and His love was gratified. Look for the good in people, in history, in the providence of God. Look for the goodness of the Lord in your own life. The dross and slag of life accumulate; smoke is in the air; flakes of soot fall softly upon us; life can easily seem a poor affair. But life is full of dignity, grace and joy, full of opportunity for goodness and kindness. Will you wait till the sunset hour gilds its passing? Will you wait till death stirs your imagination and you see, but too late, how much beauty and half-appreciated joy there was in life, how much you had of blessing, in how many ways you could have been a blessing? Look for God's goodness today. Only so will you come to see life in its fullness.

The disagreeable may be forced upon you; but your mind will instinctively find an offset. Sweet uses will shine out of adversity. You will find "tongues in the trees, books in the running brooks, sermons in stones, and good in everything." In every storm you will hear your Saviour's voice, "It is I".

Every day will have sufficient testing; but the word of Jesus will hold good: "My grace is sufficient for thee." You will see the sterner side of life, the rock-like structure of righteousness with the Puritan, but also life's gentler side with the mystic, the green pastures and still waters of peace. In your life mercy and truth shall meet, righteousness and peace shall kiss each other. The world of law shall yet be a world of love. You shall hear it thunder at Sinai; but you shall hear the angel voices of Bethlehem singing the glory of the God of love, heralding to all mankind tidings of peace and good-will.

"Old friends, old scenes, will lovelier be,
As more of heaven in each we see;
Some softening gleam of love and prayer
Shall dawn on every cross and care.

"Such is the bliss of souls serene,
When they have sworn to steadfast mean,
Counting the cost, in all to espy
Their God, in all themselves deny."

—Maltbie D. Babcock, D. D.

The Supremacy of Loving Service.

While the disciples are disputing as to who should be greatest in the new earthly kingdom, which they fancied Christ was about to establish, He, the Lord of Glory, picks up a towel, dips it into water and washes their dust-covered feet. Was ever rebuke more tellingly administered? By that example of humble, loving service did their Lord banish their dreams of preferment and attune their lives to service. It is better, finer, nobler to serve than it is to rule. Indeed, they only truly rule who win the hearts of men by loving service.

The devotion to service in the case of the Christian is to be sharply distinguished from what we know as altruism. There is a natural love which drives even the most worldly men and women to come to the relief of the needy, the unfortunate and the suffering. Large gifts for hospitals and other merciful institutions and agencies come from people to whom the Gospel of Christ and His life and character make little or no appeal. The milk of human kindness and sympathy is often found where men are under the dominion of the lust of the flesh, or the lust of the eye, or the pride of life. Infidels, and even profligates, often respond to appeals to serve stricken and suffering humanity. But this is no more than a native instinct that awakens pity and sympathy such as even animals possess.

The service which Christ calls for springs from a deeper and more divine love. It grows out of an inner change of heart. When the love of Christ constrains, there is born in the heart a passion for loving service which becomes a second nature. The Christian catches the spirit of His Lord and Master and is driven to loving service by an inner spiritual motive and impulse whose origin is divine. In that thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians, often very superficially interpreted, Paul sings the praises of a love which by far transcends the natural love with which we are born. There lies the motive power behind all Christlike service. Love so constrained God that he sent Christ to minister unto mortals.

The lesson which Christ taught His disciples is the lesson which the Church needs to be taught today. In Christ's kingdom, service is the word that counts. There are no seats of honor for any of His followers save those that are won according to the rule He has laid down: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." John caught the meaning of the lesson which Christ taught His disciples when He washed their feet; for he recognized the fact that service was to be measured in terms of love: "He that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" Settle the question of a Christlike love for mankind, and you have settled the question of Christlike service.

The key in which the life of the minister, and indeed the life of every Christian, must be pitched is expressed in those golden words of Christ when He said: "The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." Far above all other services that may be rendered is the ministry of love as Christ has revealed it in His life and deeds. It is not stooping down to render a humble, loving service. It is rising high above the standards and practices of the world, and demonstrating that there is no joy in any service which can be compared with the joy of "doing good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith." Not what have I received from others, but what have I sacrificed for others, determines the measure of the Christian's joy in any service. No joy can possibly spring from a service that is rendered where a selfish end or aim is the driving power; but there is a real joy in a deed of love which bears the mark of the love wherewith Christ has loved mankind.—Lutheran.

Dispositions and Health.

Elizabeth Cole.

"How to Start the Day Wrong"—we've all learned ways of doing that—dropped a spot of egg on a clean suit, missed the best train, forgot to take important papers. All kinds of little petty things can make the best natured among us start the day wrong. And from then on everything else goes wrong. Irritability, discontent and complications seem to follow. And why? Because we've let a little thing upset us. Our dispositions have had a pin stuck into them and that pin goes on tormenting. Enough pricking pins may do really serious damage.

A sense of humor often saves the day. But a sense of humor is incompatible with a nagging pain or a constant weariness. Even the worry that something may be wrong sours the milk of good cheer in most of us. Certain great ones of this earth like Helen Keller succeed in keeping sweet in spite of ill health, but for most of us good disposition bubbles up only out of a healthy body and a healthy mind.

Have you ever gone about your business with a tormenting pain or a tired feeling and found that you snap at your fellow-workmen and say things you don't really mean? You sometimes quarrel with your superior, or exaggerate wrongs, real or fancied. Sometimes this results in the loss of a job. Unrest and trouble in factories, offices and homes are many times traced to the fact that physical fitness is not made the fundamental asset. When a person's physical condition is out of tune his mind will not play harmoniously, so that if sudden trouble comes he is unable to meet it rationally. Whereas the healthy man seldom harbors a grievance and can look at the world sanely and optimistically.

Your days will start right if you know how you are physically. Have you had a good overhauling by your doctor recently so that you know there is nothing the matter with you? Let him tell you whether you are eating the right food. He will remind you that you need eight hours' sleep with plenty of fresh air in your rooms. ting some exercise every day, and if you are keeping your body clean inside and outside with water? See your family physician and let him look you over.

Periodic physical examinations are urged as part of the educational campaign carried on by the National Tuberculosis Association and affiliated associations throughout the country. Their aim is to eradicate tuberculosis by teaching healthy daily living, and their work is supported by the penny Christmas seals sold in December.

Our Harvest Festival.

Eugenie du Maurier Meredith

The autumn's breath strikes cold upon the breeze,
Where on a hill a little red church stands high,
Wherein God's people worship on their knees,
Thanking God for a most gracious supply
Of all the growing things of earth:

Within the church each one has placed a share
Of all the fruits, and vegetables, and flowers
That he has planted with such loving care,
And watched and guarded through the summer hours.

Upon the altar bread and grapes are laid,
Put there by loving hearts, in joyous mood—
Fit symbol of the covenant Christ has made—
With fervent words of thanks, of gratitude,
For all the growing things of earth:

Through all the church, on window sills and floors,
Bright as burnished copper, gleam fruits and leaves,
While oats and wheat make graceful arch-like doors,
'Twixt which each vegetable its glory weaves,
From all the growing things of earth:

Four cool gray walls, some high white beds of pain,
Sweet mingled breaths of flowers; a glimpse of the sky,
Azure, star-lit, or veiled by rain;
Without ..... a hall where quiet steps go by;
No need of growing things of earth:

Kind hands that minister through tortuous lane
Of days; and here is where some saddened heart
Receives from God-touched hands the fruitful gain
That glorifies the toil-burdened farmer's part,
In all the living things of earth

These casual, kindly acts, in passing done,
Soon vanish in the realm of things forgot;
But grows in loveliness with each day's sun
Through lives made beautiful as a garden spot
By all the loving hearts of earth.

For the Young Folks

Irene's Thankfulness.

"Tomorrow is Thanksgivilng Day, and here I haven't a thing to be thankful for!" Irene spoke crossly.

"Tut, tut, my child," spoke up Irene's dear old white-haired grandmother. "And hasn't thee a good home and a dear father and mother?

"And," the old lady went on, "shouldn't thee give thanks to God for these blessings?"

Brown-eyed Irene shrugged her shoulders.

"Oh, grandmother," she said, "you don't understand me. Of what good is a father and a mother when they are called away from home on Thanksgiving Day?"

Just then the door opened and a pretty young lady entered the room.

"Oh, Aunt Ruthie!" cried out Irene joyfully, "is today your day off?"

Aunt Ruth was one of the nurses in the big hospital in the city where Irene lived. Every half-holiday was spent at Irene's home.

Aunt Ruth shook her head.

"No, Irene, I must go right back. I came home for some directions I left here."

Noticing the disappointed look which went over Irene's face at these words, Aunt Ruth said: "But Irene, I wonder if you would like to come over to the hospital for a while and visit with little Alice Mason."

"Alice Mason. Who is she?" asked Irene.

"She is the light of Ward 2, the dearest and bravest little girl," answered Aunt Ruth.

Aunt Ruth and Irene were soon at the hospital. Aunt Ruth took Irene to Ward 2 immediately.

Irene gave a quiet little "Oh!" as she entered the room. There, on a little white cot, lay a tiny girl with eyes bandaged. The little girl called out a greeting as she heard the two enter the room.

Aunt Ruth left Irene with Alice while she went to her work. Irene and Alice were soon busily talking. Irene learned that Alice's parents were dead, having died two years ago, and that she made her home with her grandparents. She heard of the accident that left little Alice blinded in both eyes. Alice would never again be able to open her eyes to this world's beauty—never be able to see the beautiful sunsets, the beautiful flowers, the rainbow, the blooming trees in the springtime and many other gifts of God. Suddenly Alice surprised Irene by saying, "Tomorrow is Thanksgiving Day. Aren't you happy? I am; I have so many things to be thankful for."

"You!" exclaimed Irene. "What do you mean, Alice?"

Alice smiled.

"The terrible pains in my eyes do not come so often; people are so kind to me here; I will be able to go to grandmother's soon; and now I have you to be thankful for."

Irene looked surprised. To think that a girl in Alice's condition could be thankful for anything!

"Irene, what are you thankful for?" asked Alice.

Irene hung her head. She was ashamed of herself in the presence of this little blind child who was so thankful for so many things. Irene thought of her conversation with her grandmother.

"I don't know," she answered, in a low voice.

"Oh, Irene," cried Alice, "and you can see, and have a dear father and mother—parents who can take you in their arms and to whom you can go to when you are in sorrow and trouble.

Up came Irene's curly head.

"You have shown me the many things to be thankful for, Alice; and I thank you," she said.

When Aunt Ruth entered the room again, she found Irene and Alice laughing and talking together and having a good time.

"Aunt Ruth," cried out Irene, "may I come over tomorrow and spend Thanksgiving Day with Alice? I think I can enjoy myself so much here, and I am sure Alice will, too."

"Yes, dear," answered Aunt Ruth.

"And I'll bring my story books and read to you, Alice," Irene promised.

When Irene reached home she went at once to her grandmother and surprised her by saying, "Forgive me, grandmother; I have so many things to thank God for; and grandmother, you are one of them. I wish you would forgive me for what I said. Since I went to the hospital with Aunt Ruthie I feel different."

Tears filled grandmother's eyes and trickled down her cheeks onto the blue shawl thrown around her shoulders. Drawing Irene into her arms, she whispered softly, "God bless thee, dear child; and I thank Thee, heavenly Father, for her."—Selected.

How the Handys Kept Thanksgiving.

The four Handys were up early and impatient to be off to Clovernook, Grandpa Handy's place in the country, four miles from town—where visions of roasted chestnuts, rosy apples and hot doughnuts awaited them!

But when they drove up the lane leading to the house everything seemed strangely quiet. There was no grandpa at the gate, no grandma standing in the front door, no Hannah peeping out of the kitchen window and no Ezra waiting to put the horse and buggy in the stable.

"I can't understand it," said Lily.

"Perhaps it's a surprise," suggested Susie, the thoughtful one of the company. But no, it was not a surprise, as Teddy found to his sorrow, when he ran through the empty house and out into the kitchen, calling first upon one name and then upon another. There was no response. What he did find was a note pinned down to the table, with the butcher-knife, which Lily read in the absence of her mama, to whom it was addressed.

"Dear Daughter: I am sorry to run away on Thanksgiving, but Hannah's father was taken suddenly ill, and as we had given Ezra permission to visit his people, and the girl was in such a strait, there was nothing for it, but for your father and me to go with her as far as the cross-roads, and remain in Dover overnight. I leave things in your hands, and I know the children will help you all they can.

MOTHER."

"Oh, how unfortunate," moaned Lily, "that mama did not come. What shall we do, Jack? Perhaps we had better turn round and go home again."

"Never," cried Jack, "that would be too inglorious; besides, grandma is depending upon us. I say, sister, suppose we stay and fight it out."

"That's all very well, Jack," said Lily doubtfully, "but what can you do to help?"

"Well, that is a poser," laughed her brother, "but a fellow who has just returned from a fishing party ought to know how to—"

"Broil fish," shouted Teddy.

"But that would not help us here," smiled gentle Susie. "The first thing is to see what is to be done; there is the fire to make, the turkey to roast, and the dinner to get ready."

"Bravo, little heart," cried Jack, "you have your head in the right place, and with four pairs of hands and four Handys around, we ought to prepare a dinner fit for a king, let alone four hungry mouths!"

And so each one set to work to help. Teddy brought the chips, Jack made up the fire, Sue made the rolls as she had seen cook do, while Lily wrestled with the dressing for the big turkey, which had been parboiled the day before.

'It is real jolly," said Lily, "and we can play we are at a cooking school. Wouldn't grandma be surprised to find that Mr. Gobbler has walked into the oven by himself, while the rolls have turned to a crisp brown."

They all laughed at this conceit and the dinner went merrily on. In the pantry they found pies, cakes, cookies, a dish of baked apples and a bowl of cranberry jelly, for grandma was too good a housekeeper to leave everything to be done the last day.

"What about vegetables?" asked Sue, looking up from the oven, where she was engaged in basting the turkey.

"I don't know," said Lily, doubtfully. "I think we will have to do without them, unless we might roast some potatoes, and bake a dish of tomatoes, if Jack can open a can."

Then the table had to be set, and while the two girls were busy with it, the boys started out to feed and water the stock, "for that was what grandpa always did," Teddy remembered, and Jack said, "it would be a shame to neglect them on Thanksgiving."

Two o'clock came, and flushed and excited, tired but happy, the Handys sat down to eat their own, very own, Thanksgiving dinner. Teddy asked the blessing, as he always did at home.

"If only grandma were here, and grandpa, too," they all said in chorus.

There is an old fairy story in which one had only to utter a wish, and it was granted on the spot. And so it happened right now. There was a sound of wheels on the gravel outside, and presently in came the old couple, smiling and all out of breath. The children hurried around them. "Where is your mother?" asked grandma, in perplexity, looking first at the table and then at her grandchildren.

"We left her at home. She was so sorry not to come."

"Why, my dears, you don't mean to say you did it all yourselves?" said the dear old lady. "It was worth a journey to Dover and back, just to learn how steady and self-reliant my young folks have become."

"How come you to get back so soon?" Jack inquired, by way of hiding his modesty.

"Why," said grandpa, "it was in this way. We met Hannah's brother coming for her about ten miles down the road, and so, as there was nothing else we could do for her, we decided to come back home straightway."

Grandma said it was the best Thanksgiving dinner she ever remembered eating, first, because it was unexpected, and second, because her long ride had made her hungry, and third, because they had cooked it, and lastly, because poor Hannah's father was not so badly injured as it was thought, and I am not going to repeat all the nice things she said to the gratified children.

And grandpa said that it was the way to get through life. Whenever you find a job to be done, pitch in and do it. Some people think all life a holiday, and he had even known people who would not work on a holiday. He had heard of "holiday work", and he was proud to see that they could work when the occasion called for work.

At last it was time to return to town. "Good-bye, granny, dear," cried Lily, from the depth of the buggy. "I am glad it all happened. It was the shortest day I ever spent, and the most useful."

"And the merriest," added Jack. "I shall never be afraid 'to pitch in', as grandpa expresses it, again, when there is a tough job to be done."

Sue carried a mysterious basket on her arm. It was for old Aunt Judy, the bed-ridden servant of yore, whom grandma had remembered at the last moment, for she said "she couldn't sleep well tonight, without knowing that some poor soul had shared in her Thanksgiving".

"Sue is just grandma over again," whispered Jack, as the little sister got out to leave her burden at the old negro's cabin.

How weary they all were, and how much they had to tell when they reached home at last, in the short twilight, when one and all declared, "It was the very nicest Thanksgiving they had ever spent."—Rose W. Fry, in The Presbyterian of South.

The Biggest Pay.

One day an old umbrella-mender brought his skeleton frames and tinkering tools to our door. As he sat on a box in the sun mending the broken and torn umbrella I noticed that he did his work very carefully. He tested every piece of cloth. He sewed every inch neatly and strong.

"You seem extra careful," I remarked.

"Yes," he said, working away without looking up; "I try to do good work."

"The people you mend umbrellas for wouldn't know the difference, until you were gone," I suggested.

"No; I suppose not."

"Do you ever expect to come back this way mending umbrellas?" I asked.

"No."

"Then why are you so particular?"

His answer made me forget that his clothes were shabby and faded, that his face was brown and wrinkled, and that he spoke a broken English.

"So that it will be easier for the other fellow—the next one who comes along," he answered simply. "You see if I put on shoddy goods or do bad work, they will find it out in a few weeks, and the next mender that comes along will get the cold shoulder or the bulldog—see?"

I saw! I saw that here was a man who got two kinds of pay. I paid him fifty cents for mending my umbrella, but he carried away another pay in his heart. It was that good feeling we always have when we know we have done something the very best we could do it. But that wasn't all he carried away in his heart. He had the picture of another umbrella-mender coming to my door next year. He knew I would always think better of all umbrella-menders if he did his work well. He could almost hear me, the next year, as I said: "Good morning, Mr. Umbrella-mender! No, myl umbrella is stil good; I had it mended last year by a man who did good work. I think I'll have you mend my wife's umbrella and two of my neighbors are waiting for a mender like the one who came last year."

Do you think there are very many of us who get as big heart-pay as that first umbrella mender?—Finding Out God's Secrets.

Again, The Canvas

Every Member Canvass Dates: November 20 to December 4

The vastly important work maintained by the General Church will cost in 1928, $4,212,370.

That does not include new work. It is merely support of work now under way in mission fields in this country and overseas.

Every unit of it is authorized by General Convention, the voice of the whole Church.

General Convention directed that the Church shall pay as it goes, that dioceses shall notify National Council the amounts they expect to pay, and that expenditures shall be made in accordance with their promises.

The canvass shows what the people of the Church intend to give next year. When dioceses and districts report to National Council the amounts promised, existing work can go on, or it must be cut to fall within the amount that is to be given.

That is a sound business reason for the Canvass. But in addition to business reasons, the Canvass provides the Churchman's annual opportunity to show his gratitude and his faith, his willingness to project himself, by means of his money, into those distant places where men lack the Light of Christ's Gospel.

So the pledge card is a barometer of missionary interest.

Support the Canvass with your prayers, your service and your money.

Deaths

IN MEMORIAM.

Alice Morson Robinson.
November 20, 1852—October 31, 1927.

When at daybreak on October 31, "the one clear call" came for ALICE MORSON ROBINSON, I could but think as she "met her Pilot face to face", how truly she could lift those beautiful eyes to Him and in all humility say, "Behold the handmaid of the Lord", for such she had been all her life. She verily lived the words, "Christ has no hands but my hands to minister to Him", for she never let an opportunity pass when she could help another, doing it all as the greatest joy and privilege. To us who loved her, the more her health failed, her motto seemed to be "I Serve", till the very passion of service possessed her, never counting the cost for her frail body. The many she helped by that service so royally given, only the Master knows; the old, the young, the forgotten, the happy, the good, the sinful, the joyful, the sad, no matter who, if she could help them, that sufficed for this Soldier of the Cross to fly to their succor. As we think on the beauty of her life, and the trail of light it leaves behind her, we feel there would have been no need for that stern old Scotch Prophet to have warned her, "Take with you forgiveness, brotherly love, charity, kindness, faith, for those wares are of great value in that High Country whither you go"; for these things made her character. She used them every day and in the using, came forth a soul so sweet, so lovely, that we must always say when we think on Alice Robinson: "I thank my God on every remembrance of her."

IN MEMORIAM.

Entered into Eternal Life, October, 17, 1927, Richmond, Va., MRS. EMMA JANE GREENER, beloved mother of E. May and G. William Greener. Burial services were conducted from the residence, 3000 Monument Avenue, by the Rev. W. H. Burkhardt, D. D., rector of Grace and Holy Trinity Episcopal Church and the Rev. J. J. Scherer, Jr., D. D., of the First English Evangelical Lutheran Church. Interment in Hollywood.

"Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a Crown of Life."

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

quist were in Swedish. The Very Rev. G. S. Southworth, Dean of the Cathedral at Marquette, preached a sermon in English, and following him, the Rev. Philip Broburg, of St. Paul, Minn., Dean of Swedish work in Minnesota, preached a sermon in Swedish. Possibly the most impressive touch, showing the bond of fellowship between all present, was the singing of the closing hymn in Swedish and in English, each one singing in the tongue most familiar.

It is hoped that Bethel Church is only the beginning of work among the Swedish people of the Diocese, for there is a splendid opportunity for our church, especially as the late Rt. Rev. G. Mott Williams has given to the church a complete translation of our Prayer Book into the Swedish language.

An Orthophonic Victrola.

For special music in the choir, the trying out of anthems, and also for social activities, such as dancing among the young people of the parish, an Orthophonic Victrola has been purchased for St. Stephen's Church, Williamsburg. Mr. R. W. Hannan, Junior Warden, 6544 Darlington Road, Pittsburgh, has kindly consented to serve as chairman of the committee, authorized to buy this instrument. It is proposed to pay for the instrument independently of the church's treasury, through voluntary subscriptions from those interested in the work of our excellent choir, as well as furnishing special enjoyment for the parish's young people. At the times the dances are to be held by the young people, through the use of this victrola, a nominal admission charge will be made, a reasonable proportion of the proceeds being used for purchasing new records.

NEW JERSEY.

Rt. Rev. Paul Matthews, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. W. Knight, D. D., Coadjutor.

Annual Conference of Church Workers Among Colored People.

The sixth annual conference of Church Workers Among Colored People in the first and second provinces held their session at St. Mark's Church, Plainfield, New Jersey, beginning the evening of October 5 and closing on the night of October 7. The conference was welcomed by the Hon. J. T. MacMurray, Mayor of Plainfield, the Rev. E. V. Stevenson, rector of Grace Church, and the Rt. Rev. A. W. Knight, Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of New Jersey, with a response by the Rev. G. F. Miller, of St. Augustine's Church, Brooklyn. The sermon was by the Rev. J. H. Johnson, of St. Cyprian's Church, New York City.

Thursday the President, the Rev. George M. Plaskett, made the annual address, in which he stressed the necessity of the conference establishing a scholarship fund, the interest of which may be used to assist deserving students. The conference went on record as committed to such a plan. Each parish and mission in the provinces will be expected to bring to the conference year by year a small per capita tax, the increase of which in time will give a substantial sum as the principal. The Woman's Auxiliary voted $126 as a nest egg for this purpose. With the election of the same officers the conference was organized for the coming two years: the Rev. George M. Plaskett, President; the Rev. C. Canterbury Corbin, Vice-President; the Rev. William N. Harper, Secretary; Mr. Joseph H. Brown, Sr., Treasurer. The Church Service League elected the following officers for the same time: Mrs. William McKinney, President; Mrs. Maude Cole, Vice-President; Mrs. Laura McCoy, Secretary; Miss Josie Phillips, Treasurer.

On the invitation of the Rev. Mr. Bowles the conference voted to meet in 1929 at St. Luke's Church, New Haven, Connecticut; the 1928 session will be the triennial and general conference of all Church workers among Colored people, and this is to be held at St. Augustine's Church, Brooklyn, New York.

ALBANY.

Rt. Rev. R. H. Nelson, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. G. A. Oldham, D. D. Coadjutor.

St. Paul's Church, Albany, Celebrates One Hundred Years of Christian Service.

November 13-20 marks the culmination of one hundred years of Christian life and activity of St. Paul's Parish, Albany, N. Y.

Among the distinguished guests and preachers will be Bishop Murray, Bishop Reese, of Southern Ohio, and the Rev. Dr. Roelif H. Brooks, former rector of St. Paul's, now rector of St. Thomas' Church, New York City. Bishop Nelson and Bishop Oldham will also officiate.

St. Paul's Church has had a notable career. Bishop Johnson, of California, was confirmed in St. Paul's. Bishop Mosher entered the ministry from St. Paul's, as did the Rev. Jacob Streibert, Jr., Ph. D., Professor of Old Testament studies, Bexley Hall, and some twenty other clergy. Bishop Kip, first Bishop of California, was rector of St. Paul's from 1837-53, and the Rev. Dr. Thomas A. Starkey, first Bishop of what is now the Diocese of Newark, was rector from 1854-58.

The parish has during its one hundred years raised well over $100,000 for missions.

St. Paul's has one of the few strong Brotherhood Chapters in the diocese. During last summer when no services were provided at St. Stephen's Church, Elsmere, which is a child of St. Paul's Parish, the men of the Brotherhood volunteered to conduct the services. A chapel of St. Paul's Church was organized in the year 1897, services were conducted by the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, and the chapel was called Saint Andrew's. It later became independent and is now a flourishing parish of five hundred members. (Bishop Creighton was rector there for seven years.)

At the conclusion of the centennial celebration, the members of the parish will turn over to the trustees a fund of $100,000 to be added to the Endowment Fund, which will increase the Endowment Fund to half a million dollars. This centennial fund was raised during the rectorship of Dr. Brooks, under whom the parish had a remarkable growth.

The Rev. Arthur R. McKinstry, formerly of the National Council, is now rector of the parish.

Personal Notes

The Rev. James E. W. Cook, rector of St. Paul's, Greenville, who has been quite ill with pneumonia, is now rapidly recovering.

The Rev. Frank Damrosch, Jr., formerly rector of St. James' Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., has accepted a call to St. Andrew's Church, Newark, N. J., with address at 933 South Seventeenth Street.

The Rev. Eric A. Sidney Attridge, formerly rector of Zion Church, Palmyra, N. Y., has accepted a call to be vicar of St. Paul's Mission, Bishop, Cal.

The Rev. Louis L. Perkins, formerly minister-in-charge of St. John's Mission, Green River, Wyo., has accepted a call to St. Paul's Church, Kittanning, Pa.

The Rev. J. H. Cabot, Ph. D., formerly non-parochial minister of Massachusetts, has accepted a call to St. Peter's Church, Weston, Mass.

The Rev. Clarence D. Frankel has resigned as minister-in-charge of Trinity Church, Platteville, Wis.

The Rev. S. Ezra Neikirk, rector of St. James' Church, Pittston, Pa., has accepted a call to Epiphany Church, Glenburn, Pa. His address after December 1 will be Dalton, Pa.

The Rev. John M. Robeson, D. D., former rector of St. Stephen's Church, Goldsboro, and St. Paul's Church, Lynchburg, Va., has assumed charge of Grace Church, Plymouth, N. C.

Ordinations.

On All Saints' Day, in Calvary Cathedral, Sioux Falls, S. D., the Rt. Rev. Hugh L. Burleson, D. D., Bishop of the District, advanced to the priesthood the Rev. Conrad H. Gesner, Missionary Canon of the Cathedral. Bishop Burleson preached. Bishop Roberts read the Litany and united in the imposition of hands, together with Dean Woodruff, the Rev. Messrs. Junker, Melbourne and Scriven, South Dakota clergy, and the Rev. Homer E. Grace, Deaf Mute Missionary in the Northwest.

In St. Stephen's Church, Providence, R. I., on October 18, Gustav A. Schweitzer was ordained deacon by the Rt. Rev. James DeWolf Perry, D. D., Bishop of Rhode Island.

The candidate was presented by the Rev. Frederick L. Maryon, of Cranston, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Alva E. Carpenter, of Providence.

Mr. Schweitzer is to be missionary of St. Barnabas' Church, Apponaug, with address at 12 South Water Street, Providence.

BUY INCOME!

When one makes an "investment," what is he actually doing? Just buying income—that's all. The average "investor" buys only temporary income. The investor in

We attribute the success with which our work has met to the following facts:

¶ . . . We devote our attention exclusively to the execution of work for the Church.

¶ . . . The continued increase of our knowledge and facilities since our establishment in 1877 has been, and continues to be of material assistance in the improvement of the standards of church furnishing.

¶ . . . The work is designed by a corps of artists, thoroughly familiar with the best requirements of Christian art, decoration, and architecture. Their designs correspond in detail and in spirit with the character of the architecture of the Church.

¶ . . . Familiarity with the ritual of the Church results in designs and arrangements which permit the convenient celebration of the service.

¶ . . . Our broad understanding enables us to design individual pieces which are not only good in themselves, but which harmonize with the rest of the church. It also enables us to completely furnish and embellish churches from thoroughly comprehensive and satisfactory schemes.

¶ . . . The work is not only designed in our own Studios, but is executed in our own workshops under direct personal supervision, by skilled mechanics. They are thoroughly trained in the principles of proper construction, and no pains are spared to carefully finish the work in all details.

¶ . . . Only carefully selected materials are used.

¶ . . . We employ no agents, but deal only directly with church authorities, architects or donors.

¶ . . . Our productions are lasting in construction and finish, and give continued satisfaction. This is evidenced by the fact that we receive orders from churches where the first pieces were placed by us soon after the establishment of the business, from clergy who had become our patrons as long as forty years ago.

When requesting designs and suggestions kindly give particulars as fully as possible. Work of this character requires sufficient time for careful execution. Gifts for Christmas should be ordered now, and it is not too early to take under consideration articles to be dedicated on Epiphany, Easter, Ascension, or Whitsun-day, 1928.

A NATIONAL CHURCH PAPER FOR ALL THE FAMILY.

Southern Churchman

Vol. 92. RICHMOND, VA., NOVEMBER 26, 1927. No. 48.

18. For the preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us which are saved, it is the power of God.

19. For it is written, I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will bring to nothing the understanding of the pru dent.

20. Where is the wise? Where is the scribe? Where is the disputer of this world? Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?

21. For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe.

"In the cross of Christ I glory"

23. For the Jews require a sign, and the Greeks seek after wisdom.

23. But we preach Christ crucified, un to the Jews a stumbling block, and unto the Greeks foolishness.

24. But unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ, the power of God, and the wisdom of God.

25. Because the foolishness of God is wiser than men, and the weakness of God is stronger than men.

26. For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called.

29. That no flesh should glory in His presence.

30. But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption;

31. That according as it is written, He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord.—1 Corinthians 1:18-31.

When my son visited me after coming to this Parish he discovered that in the lapse of thirty years without a Rector the Communicant list had dwindled to one active member. Shortly afterwards in visiting in old Vawter's Parish he came across some old records and wrote me.

"Dear Father:

I see that in 1826 Josiah Ellis, as Delegate from St. Luke's Pedlar reported that they had one member and hoped to get more that year. I am glad to see you are holding your own."

Well, I am, and a little more, membership has increased 1500 per cent! Can you beat it!

Help us to continue the work by helping with Parish House, please.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

There is no Gethsemane without an angel.—Selected.

If we make so much of what we do and so little of what we leave undone, then life's real accomplishments can never be ours.

"Not our taste, but God decides what is right or wrong. He who wishes to know what that taste is, let him learn it from the law of God. That law is standard and permanent."

"He is the least unhappy, who makes least account of happiness in this world; puts himself in God's way to it; patiently waits His time for it, and can see a smile on the face of death."

There is something amiss with the man who knows what course is right, but still wants time to think about it. —Selected.

A moment in the morning, take your Bible in your hand,
And catch a glimpse of glory from the peaceful Promised Land;
It will linger still before you when you seek the busy mart,
And like flowers of hope will blossom into beauty in your heart.

"I sought the Lord in sun and stars,
And where the wild seas roll,
And found Him not. As mute I stood,
Fear overwhelmed my soul;
But when I gave to one in need
I found the Lord of Love indeed."

"This is the feast: The water of life." And these are the purposed guests at the feast "He that is athirst," "Whosoever will." And these are the King's messengers, to give invitations to the feast: "The Spirit and the Bride," and he that heareth." And this is the condition of entrance to the feast: "Freely!" —J. H. Jowett.

I have a thousand times tested the efficiency of prayer in moments of difficulty, when confronted with a little temptation, when overwhelmed with irritation, before an anxious interview, before writing a difficult passage. How often has the temptation floated away, the irritation mastered itself, the right word been said, the right sentence written! To do all we are capable of, and then to commit the matter to the hand of the Father, that is the best that we can do.—Arthur C. Benson.

"I shall be as happy as it is possible to be on this side Heaven, when I have a clear perception that divine things are preferred in my esteem to all others, and have taken such possession of my soul, that I settle upon them with full acquiescence; not looking for rest and satisfaction from sensual gratifications, worldly prospects, or comforts of any kind; but solely in communion with God, and enjoying myself from day to day in doing His work, in the relish I have for spiritual exercises, and a diligent preparation for eternity. O Blessed Spirit, clear up this idea to my mind, and by Thy effectual operation make it life and power to my heart!"

You Know?

That many of the great Bible teachers of the present day were set straight in their knowledge of the Word of God by a little booklet by Dr. C. I. Scofield called

"RIGHTLY DIVIDING THE WORD OF TRUTH"?
(The original Edition)

God has wonderfully used this series of ten lectures, fundamental to a clear understanding of the Bible:

1. The Jew, the Gentile and the Church of God.
2. The Seven Dispensations.
3. The Two Advents.
4. The Two Resurrections.
5. The Five Judgments.
6. Law and Grace.
7. The Believer's Two Natures.
8. The Believer's Standing and State.
9. Salvation and Rewards.
10. Believers and Professors.

God certainly gave us this little book through his servant—not added revelation but Spirit-given interpretation.

Here are a few out of many letters, showing how much this little booklet has helped.

"* * I praise God for its marvelous ministry, and hope you can spread this still further."—C. G. Trumbell, Editor Sunday-School Times.

"To my great loss I did not know the book until late in my ministry."—James M. Gray.

MEMORIES

With yearning hearts we linger and look across the gray, shadowed and desolate, sea of life for our ships to come. We know that somewhere beyond the waves curving sullenly into cold foam, falling with monotonous anger upon the shore, somewhere on the further side of the tossing waste and the dull gray skies and the lowering mist, there are sunshine and beauty, clear skies reflected in the blue of the laughing, rippling water over which our ships are slowly driven by gentle, kindly winds. We look and long to see them come sailing upon the horizon, bringing with them light and gladness in the radiance of which the mist will disappear, the clouds will drift away and the black waves will shine and sparkle.

We may not summon from the sunlight and the beauty beyond the cold and darkness and desolation the ships we have waited for so long. It may be that we will never see them sailing to us over the distant horizon freighted with the beautiful things we have dreamed of, that we must turn away presently after all our years of hoping and be borne home.

The ships we wait for may never come, but we can call to us ships of ours freighted with the beautiful things we have known. When Hope departs and leaves darkness, Memory may live and bring light soft and beautiful, in the brightness of which the heart may live and the soul may gather strength and consolation and peace. Dreams may never be realized, but life has been lived and never dies or departs and the happiness we have known is ours always if we will but have it. Fairer and more beautiful than any of the lands or seas from which the ships we wait for may come are the days gone by in which we have loved and felt and labored and enjoyed. They are ours for always and we may bring them back if we will. We may gladden and lighten the desolation and the darkness with the ships belonging to us, summoned from across the sea, waiting for our calling and freighted with music sweeter and beauty more rare and pleasures more intense than any the world can give.

As we become older and wait and linger and yearn longer for the ships which do not come, it is our right and our happiness to call to us often and with pleasure ever more intense the ships of ours which have sailed from us, which are lingering in the beauty and brightness of other days to come back to us through the intervening darkness and mist and bring to us balm and comfort and peace.

ADVENT

It would seem that the Advent season, which ought to be a time of spiritual revival, is being more and more ignored. This may be due partly to ignorance of the Advent truth and partly to the absorption in the activities preparatory to Christmas. But a proper observance of Advent will save Christmas. There is no more powerful call to repentance and holy living in the Scriptures than the truth that Christ is coming back to earth and that this coming is to be regarded by each age as imminent and calling for watchfulness and readiness to meet Him. It does not mean death nor is it to be spiritualized. The same Lord Jesus Who went up is to return visibly and personally. The prophets pictured Him as coming in humiliation and in majesty. He has come in humiliation—He now awaits His crown and His throne which God is under oath to give Him. He has gone to receive for Himself a kingdom and to return. Often the Advent truth is thought of as the day of judgment and the end of the world. For the Christian Church, which is the Bride of Christ, the first stage of His coming known as the Rapture ought to be longed for, as a bride awaits the wedding day. Of course there will be judgment for the wicked, but the phrase "end of the world" means end of the age. The dispensation of grace is to be followed by the glorious Millennial reign of Christ when His Kingdom is set up on the earth. This great truth of the Lord's return, so ignored by many, is mentioned over three hundred times in the New Testament. It would seem to be a necessary part of conversion, for in the model New Test Church we are told that the Thessalonians "turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God and to wait for His Son from heaven".

Many religious and political perplexities would be clarified by a true understanding of this truth. It ought to help one's faith to realize that the mystery of the Church as the body of our called ones, both Jew and Gentile who are saved by faith in a crucified and risen Saviour is to issue, when the elect number is made up, in the return of the Lord. "God did visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for His name . . . after this I will return," Acts 15:14, 16. So the prayer book—"accomplish the number of Thine elect and hasten Thy Kingdom". Not compacts, and federations, and movements will establish righteousness in the earth, but the coming of the Lord. There has been so much abuse of His Advent, and so many false conceptions that in our brief space we feel limited in not being able to clear up these. But in all ages the purest branch of the Church have held it, and the pre-Millennial hope has been the unvarying faith of the true Church. And the most fruitful portion hold it to-day. It has added urgency today in the multiplying buds on the prophetic tree, and which our Lord told us to look for as the harbinger of His coming.

The practical application of it all is repentance. Every day at 12 M. Western Union clocks are cut in to Washington to be corrected. Our touch with God must correct our aberrations from truth and righteousness. Though primarily Jewish, we believe the application applies to us, when Peter said, "Repent . . . that times of refreshing may come from the presence of the Lord and that He may send Jesus Christ . . . Whom the heavens must receive until the times of restoration of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His holy prophets since the world began," Acts 3:19-21. How sorely the world needs restoration—restoration of righteousness—look at the divorce courts jammed—think of the suicides—the condition of many cities like that of Sodom—nameless diseases threatening the race—twenty-three billions spent one year for luxuries—boys shipped from a certain high school for improper relations with the girls—85,000 murders in ten years—crime costing ten billions—free love advocated, and when men like Sir Auckland Geddes say that in Europe the age is dying.

Then we need restoration of authority. Our social complex presents a tangle that man's effort to unravel seems to intensify. Without the Bible as authoritative we are adrift with no compass. We need a restoration of man's authority as head of the house. The world is toiling in the meshes of government despotisms, industrial imperialism and corporate wealth.

All admit we need a restoration of peace. Nine years after the Armistice, leaders say the world is an armed camp. They once said the Hague Tribunal would bring peace. Then they said the League of Nations made it war-proof. God says in Ezek. 21:27: "I will overturn, overturn, overturn it, and it shall be no more until He shall come Whose right it is, and I will give it to Him." "The government shall be upon His shoulder." Oh, that is indeed the blessed hope for a world in subjection to the Prince of this world, whose reign will end when the Lord Jesus comes. Satan must be dethroned and Christ enthroned. The war to end war is Armageddon. The Kaiser said of the Lord's coming before the war that he did not like it, as it would interfere with his plans. Queen Victoria longed for it that she might place her crown at His feet. Oh, from the world's unrest—groaning and travailing in pain—we, with the first fruits of the Spirit, ought "to groan within ourselves waiting for the adoption—to-wit, the redemption of our body". The times are out of joint—the world's one hope is the coming of the Lord. For our citizenship is in heaven, from whence we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, Who shall change the body of our humiliation that it may be fashioned like unto His glorious body." Oh, what a consummation devoutly to be desired. And then, beloved, to be reunited with loved ones gone before and knitting severed friendships up where partings are no more. It is enough. With raptured soul we cry, "Even so come, Lord Jesus".

R.

We wish to call attention to a notable article in this week's issue by the Rev. Dyson Hague, D. D. It is an address delivered by him on the occasion of the Jubilee gathering of Wycliffe College, Toronto, Canada, last summer. Dr. Hague is Professor of Liturgics at Wycliffe, and rector of Epiphany Church, Toronto. He is one of the great preachers and teachers of the Church and is the outstanding leader of the Evangelical School in the Anglican Church. He is the author of "The Protestantism of the Prayer Book", "The Holy Communion in the Church of England", "The Story of the English Prayer Book", "The Wonder of the Book". The latter has gone through two editions and been translated into seevral languages.

We consider this address such a powerful rallying cry to all true Evangelicals as to be epochal. It is the most timely and noteworthy article that has appeared in the Southern Churchman, in our judgment, and we urge our readers to read it carefully and to get others to read it.

THE INAUGURAL ADDRESS DELIVERED AT WYCLIFFE COLLEGE JUBILEE, SEPTEMBER 22, 1927

By Dr. Dyson Hague

We meet today on a great occasion. A union of Wycliffe men, summoned to a fellowship of quickened life, to concentrate our forces and confer together with regard to the duty of the hour, and the great call that lies before us as a representative body of Evangelical Churchmen. Let us, first of all, recall that we are what we are today, and we are where we are today, by the grace of God, and the faith and work of those Churchmen of half a century ago who laid so strong and deep the foundations of our college. The more one considers the beginnings of the Wycliffe movement, the more one is impressed with the courage, the consistency and the patient persistence of those men. In the face of a preponderating majority, they dared to stand out and to stand up for what they knew to be the truth of God and the Bible and the Church of England. They accepted cheerfully the derisive sneers of opposition. They knew that they were the trustees of a great truth; the custodians of a great heritage. They were sure they were right because they were sure the others were wrong. Standing four square on the rock of the Bible in the company of Wycliffe and Cramner and Latimer, with a singular lucid understanding of the teaching of the Prayer Book and the Articles, fortified by the study of history and the scholarship of Goode and Lightfoot and Perowne and Ellicott and Westcott and Ryle, they knew in all their heart and in all their soul that however small a minority when the time and truth of the centuries was counted. They knew that sacerdotalism was not the true teaching of the Church of England. They knew that a narrow and parochial ecclesiasticalism would never save the Church of England in Canada. They knew that a policy of isolation and ostracism was fatal to the growth of our Church in this new country, and that if the type of clergy that was being produced, and the style of teaching that was being encouraged, and the form of service that was prevailing, were to be widespread; if there were no other type of clergy, no Evangelical Gospel preaching services; that the Church of England in Canada would be an unprogressive narrow faction doomed to the paucity and poverty of insulated parishes and congregations without cooperation with other churches, missionary vision, or world-wide effort.

We marvel today not only at what they were, but at what they did. And yet we need not marvel when we remember how from the very beginning their complete dependence was upon the power of the Holy Ghost and every effort was begun, continued and ended in earnest intercession. How they cheered one another by the promises of God! How they avoided all acrimony of controversy and confined themselves to the deeper things! How they claimed no monopoly of the Gospel, but let it be known that as far as they themselves, their churches, their houses and their Dioceses were concerned, they were determined to secure it. How true they were to type! How gallant their faith! How free from the type of mind that loves vacillation rather than initiative and conformity rather than individuality! How nobly above the miasma of compromise, which was the attitude of many! How they saw their line of action clearly, and how in season and out of season, in pulpit and in press, they sought to shake the average Churchman out of his lethargy to a realization of the tremendous call of the day he lived in. And how cheerfully, with courage, heart and will, and gladness in the fight they were as men who face a hopeless hill with sparkling and delight.

If today we stand in this hall, if today we are singing unto the Lord a new song because He has done marvellous things, and we believe will do more marvellous, it is because of the men, those men with cheerful, inspiring, perceptive faith whose knowledge of the principles, whose enthusiasm for the principles, was inspiring and contagious.

And not with pride, not with vain glory, not with any falsity of self-esteem, but with humility and gratitude let us affirm and reaffirm that Wycliffe has saved the Church of England in Canada. It has saved our Church in Canada. We thank God for others, and what others have done. We speak that which we do know, and testify that which we have seen, and we believe and assert that if it had not been for Wycliffe our Church in Canada would in all probability have been a narrow, static and feeble body, utterly without the influence, vitality and aggressiveness and missionary power that characterizes her today. And more. There are exceptions, thank God, but in nearly every Diocese in Canada it may be said that where you have a real, live, earnest parish, it is nearly always an Evangelical parish, and generally the parish of a Wycliffe man; and that just as in the old days the Evangelicals stirred the Church and saved the Church by congregational singing, potent prayer meetings, earnest visiting, vigilant soul seeking, world-wide missionary efforts, popular services, so during the last fifty years the Evangelical succession of Apostolic earnestness in hundreds of Wycliffe parishes has awakened and conserved our Church life in Canada.

The duty of the hour therefore for us as Wycliffe men is to have faith, to have more faith, and to have more faith still. To have faith in our position. Canada needs us today. The Church in Canada needs us today. But we must catch the spirit of high conviction, that intense optimism that throbs in every pulse of our College history. We must believe that the Church of England in Canada has a great mission, and that the Wycliffe men in the Church of England have a great cause as Evangelicals. And we must have faith in our position as ministers of the Gospel and as clergy. We must believe that no other calling can compare with it. Amid a million men vibrant with the optimism of Canada's wealth and need and progress and power, we must glory in the fact that we are not only nation and empire builders, but the builders of a great Empire. We are preparing for the coming of the Coming King. We have a great calling; higher than that of the teacher and educator; nobler than that of the doctor and physician; worthier far than that of the merchant, agriculturist or financier. Remember Simeon's "there goes 500 men", and Mott's famous declaration when offered $100,000 for the American consulship in China, that he would not resign an ambassadorship for a consul's position. We are ambassadors of Christ. It is a glorious thing to be a minister today, and a glorious thing to be an Evangelical, in this new land crowded with its innumerable possibilities.

Liberalism.

Men say Evangelicalism is a spent force. They say it is merely negative in its teaching, unaggressive, impractical. Evangelicalism is not a spent force. Anglo-Catholicism is a retrograde movement. Modernism is a retrograde movement. Sacerdotalism is not a spent force; but its habitat is the Church of Rome, not the Church of England. It is for the ignorant, not the intelligent. It can never survive in an atmosphere of Biblical intelligence. Liberalism is not a spent force, but its habitat is Unitarianism, not the sanctified knowledge of the spirit-taught evangelical. 1 Cor. 2; Luke 10, etc. Evangelicalism never can be a spent force, for its habitat is the heart of universal man. As Evangelical Churchmen, Wycliffe men, we stand for the larger churchmanship, larger in its conception of life and truth. It is sacerdotalism that is narrow, retrogressive and small. There is a sacerdotalism that is Scriptural, true. It is Johannine (Rev. 1:6), Petrine (1 Pet. 2:6), and that is that the priests of God are not a small and limited body of men, the clergy so-called, but the whole body of the faithful, men and women, all who love God and adore the Lord Jesus Christ. We, as Carnegie Simpson has so well said, are the full sacerdotalists; the others have only a mutilated sacerdotalism born of man, not of God. It is the claim of many high Churchmen so-called, and Anglo-Catholics so-called, that they alone represent the Church of England and are the true Anglicans. It is a pure delusion. We are the true Anglicans. We are the fully pure and the true and real Churchmen. The idea that God's grace and Christ's righteousness and salvation generally is via the Church and the Church's organs and rites and through the medium of the priests of the Church, is a very widespread and growing view today, but it is not big enough. It is small, and worse than that, it is false. It is Roman through and through, not Anglican; it is erroneous, blasphemous, dangerous. We proclaim the larger, the broader view of truth; the saving view; the view that the Church needs today; and that is, that salvation is not by man or through a man, but through Jesus Christ; that the priest who has access to God is not the vested sacerdotalist, but the child of God redeemed by the precious blood (1 Pet. 2; Rev. 1:6). This is the true sacerdotalism of the Bible and the Church of England. For this we must contend earnestly. We must be willing to stand, and to stand alone; to stand up; to stand out; to stand for; to stand against.

The truth has ever been and ever will be with minorities, and we must with great confidence in our cause dare to be brave and to be braver. How easily we are scared by big phrases, big names, big authorities and big majorities. How hard it is for us to be firm when others float; to hold to the rock when others drift; to know when others surmise; to believe when others doubt; to affirm when many deny. One of the greatest dangers facing Evangelicalism in Canada today is that of the mistaken endeavor to bring the Gospel into harmony with the spirit and results of modern science, and of an easy-going acquiescence in the all-merging and all-submerging tide of a semi-Unitarian, Theosophic, Pantheistic theology which is the fad and the fallacy of preachers today. The very air is full of forces so subtly camofluaged that heresies that would have brought men almost to the stake are now openly promulgated, not only from Unitarian, but from United Church, Baptist and Anglican pulpits. Most of us would rather live in the atmosphere of 1 Cor. 13 than that of Rom. 3 and 5 or Gal. 3 and 4. We always would prefer the beatitude of Matt. 5:9 rather than the beatitude of Matt. 5:10, but He who said, "Blessed are the peacemakers", also said, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you." No man who is at all in any way a student of the times can deny that there are breakers ahead for drifting Evangelicals. If we drift away from the old standards, the old ideals, the old practices, we shall be as salt that has lost its savor, a candle-stick without light and a wick without oil. To drift from Romans, Galatians, Ephesians, Colossians, Hebrews, 1 Peter to a Gospel that is excellent for the Rotarians, the Kiwanis, the Masons, a Gospel of social ameliorization, humanitarian good cheer, character salvation, a kingdom of heaven to be induced by education, sanitation, eugenics, pacificism, the internationalizing of social ideals and the equation of all religions, is sure and final suicide. A leading Churchman in England said not long ago that "the Evangelicals, with their plain teaching about sin and forgiveness, are gone, and their place is taken by the professors of a flabby latitudinarism which ignores sin—the central fact of human life—and therefore can find no place for the atonement; that heresy is preached more unblushingly than it was thirty years ago". And the other day Athelstan Riley, most fearless of Anglo-Catholic laymen in England, deplored at the historic Church Assembly in Westminster Hall the passing of the old Evangelican party, and said: "Only those Evangelicals who permitted themselves to be absorbed into the ranks of Modernism could survive." We cannot speak for England. But as for us and for our College, we dare to believe that Russell and Riley are utterly wrong. Our faith is that only those that dared not to be absorbed by the Modernists will survive. The great names of Berridge, Wilberforce, Shaftesbury, Cecil, Romaine, Venn, Goode, Bickersteth, Ryle, Moule are as silver trumpets; calling us, summoning us in the face of drifting tides to stand fast, to stand, and having done all things, to stand. We need a bolder attitude. As Napoleon said, to conquer we must replace, and as one of his great marshals pithily declared: "An army of deer led by a lion is better than an army of lions led by a deer." Illimitable is the force of a clergyman as a religious teacher who stands firm and speaks out and dares to oppose the falsities and confront fearlessly the fallacies of many of the so-called loyal scholarship today. Our young men are harried continuously by the small and narrow views of ecclesiastically biased and ignorant men. But when they are asked with accents of superiority, "Why do you not observe the traditions of the Church"? they should be able to stand and say with the appeal judicious from Philip drunk with the intoxication of sacerdotalism or rationalism to Philip sober, to the Church's teaching, and to the Bible and to common sense, "What traditions and what Church"? and to answer with their Lord and Master to their inquiries: Why do you transgress the commandments of God and the injunctions and teaching of your own Church by your tradition?

One could wish that every graduate of Wycliffe would read that article in the Globe of last August on the Latest Finding, which very cleverly took up the retort of some critic that the Evangelicals were obscurantists and ignorant of the latest findings of scholarship: Latest findings of whom? it asked. Of German rationalists, men with an invincible prejudice against the Bible who come to their so-called investigations with the prepossessions that invalidate all scientific enquiry, sure that Moses didn't write the Pentateuch. David the Psalms, Isaiah Isaiah, John John? And it countered with the retort: Why do you not conform with and conform to the latest traditions of more learned and more scholarly men who in Biblical research and critical theology have shown that many of the so-called scholarly leaders of the scholarly are blind followers of the blind; men who were willingly ignorant of the fact that their so-called universally accepted theories have been discredited by later researches and abandoned by a truer scholarship.

The other day, as President of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, at Leeds, Sir Arthur Keith vauntingly declared the final triumph of Darwinism. But not long ago I read a book of his, and after reading it I made this comment: "Never did I read such a superstructure of dubious probabilities, reared upon such a foundation of unquestionable improbabilities." It was all hypothesis, not hypostasis. And can we in Toronto forget that the elite of the intellectuals of America, the American Association for the Advancement of Science, heard from the lips of the foremost Darwinian of the world an indictment of its weaknesses and failures that was as amazing for its frankness as for its audacity. With a relentless hand he tore down, one by one, the very pillars of the Darwinian hypothesis of the origin of species, and showed that the theory that for nearly fifty years has had a popularity incredible, and has dominated the thinking of a large proportion of the scientific leaders of two continents, was suspended upon pegs that are nearly all of them rotten, and consisted of links of a merely theoretical strength. Let them conjecture; we know. Let them theorize; we have a sure and asaleutic foundation. When so many of the professors are so charming, so clever, so confident, can we be sure? Marcus Dobs said, "Denny is so sure". We can. Why was Paul sure? Gal. 2:5; Gal. 2:11. He knew not only what but Whom he believed. He was sure he was right because he was sure Peter was wrong. In these moods of hesitation and ambiguity that overcrowd us like fogs and paralyze our wills, our only safety is the stand of Paul, of John upon the eternal Word. And if we cannot be sure, at least let us be silent. As Schaff so finely said, "Not for all the wealth and wisdom of this world would I weaken the faith of the humblest Christian in his divine Lord and Saviour and in God's Word. But if by the grace of God I could convert a single soul to a childlike faith in Him who loved and died for me and for all, I would feel that I had not lived in vain." Oh, brothers, never, never, my brothers, whisper a word that would weaken any one's faith in the Word of God. Never in sermon or address suggest a doubt with regard to anything that would weaken faith in Jesus Christ, the Bible, the Gospel or the Church. If I forget Thee, O Son of God, O Word of God, let my right hand forget her cunning. I would rather cut off my right hand than turn any away from the Gospel. Let us give them our beliefs; they have doubts of their own. In newspaper and magazine they get their thousands; let us give them 10,000 to overcome. I shall never forget hearing once in a great Cathedral in the West a young preacher preaching on one of the Psalms, and the whole of his sermon was occupied in trying to prove that David did not write it. And there were a thousand men or so hungry, eager, asking bread, and he was giving them stone; asking for a fish, he was giving them a serpent; asking for an egg, and he was offering them a scorpion of criticism and conjecture.

Men of Wycliffe, the future is ours. Time is the mother of truth, and truth is the daughter of time. We are the coming men. A great door and energic full of possibilities of achievement and advance lies open before us. But there are, as there ever have been, many adversaries.

And the greatest problem is ourselves. We are the problem. First, there is the ever-recurring danger of the loss of enthusiasm; the drifting into the common-place; the waning of the halo; the passing of the glamour of the first love; and that awful setting down into a pit of dullness, monotonous, static, no effort to put new life into the message; no faith in revival; no hope of new life, which is, I believe, the euperistatic sin of ministers. (The Greek Heb. 12-1.) Oh, it is a glorious thing when a man has big faith in a small parish, large ambitions in a small sphere, dreaming dreams, seeing visions, fighting more fearlessly and joyously as the opposing forces increase, an Athanasius contra mundum, a little one against a thousand. Daring to say Ps. 110, 51, 141, and to re-echo Athanasius. Nebicula est transibit—it is a little cloud; it will pass. Darkness is for an hour; light eternal. The clouds pass; the sun shineth on.

There is the ever-pressing danger of the spirit of fear (2 Tim. 2:7-8), when we retreat into Coward's Castle afraid of the times, our eye on the giants, the Anakim of modern thought, the Goliath, of science and philosophy; afraid of the shadows, the sophisms of the theosophic, the paralogisms of pithanology (Col. 2:4); the illusive and delusive plausibilities of a theology that is simply a revamped Pelaganism, merely twentieth century Agnosticism. One of the appalling things today is the Unitarianizing or theosophizing of the pulpit. If most themes and the sermons of the so-called Protestant and Evangelical pulpits in the daily and religious press may be taken as samples, then any Unitarian would be glad to preach nine out of ten of them.

Standing today with fifty years behind us and the great future before us, we can be sure of this, that our safety and our success lies in our acceptance as guardians of the trust that we have received as a heritage, to guard the paracatatheke of Wycliffe. 1 Tim. 6-20 and 2 Tim. 1-14. We are specialists. We are experts. As specialists and experts we have an exclusive occupation, and that is the Evangel, and our only hope and chance is to cry with Rupert Brooke: "Now God be thanked, Who has matched us with this hour." We must be willing to pay the price and accept as our primary task, worthy of the highest ambition, the concentration of all our powers to the task of preaching ever the Word of God in its totality. Our watchword for the hour, our thrilling word and word of power, is Evangelize. Let others delve in scientific, philosophic, political or vapid Unitarian preaching; we will glory in the glorious Gospel.

In great city church, or distant mission, or country parish, if we only stick to our work and bring all our powers to bear one thing, the Holy Spirit may lead our Church forward in a great Church revival. Not through the 32,000 or 22,000 or 10,000, but through the 300 faithful to the Word, faithful to the Gospel, faithful to the work. We dare not plead our individual feebleness. God has ever operated not through the many, wise, mighty and illustrious, but the feeble who are willing in the day of His power. We will be lost in the crowd. We will drift in the broad road if we do not stick fast to the one thing that we have to do, and the one thing we can do—proclaim the unsearchable riches of Christ. Remember that the quality of the Church is far more important than the quantity, and in this century the imperious call is for specialists, experts. Our only raison d'etre in this age is: This one thing I do.

Champions.

And above all, and this is my final word, we are champions. It is not enough for a Wycliffe man to have Evangelical convictions. He must champion them. It is not enough for a Wycliffe man to be faithful to Evangelical truth. He must champion it. A champion is one who knows what he believes and is brave enough to declare it positively, unashamedly; one who not only has convictions, but the courage of his convictions. He dares to stand alone (Ephes. 6-13; Gal. 5:1). And he is ever an enthusiast. He is not afraid to use adjectives. My friends have accused me in an indulgence of adjectives. I thank God I do. I would fain rise in the company of St. Paul and St. Peter and St. John to the heights of their enthusiasm, and as I think and speak the Gospel use the terms glorious, glorious, grand, splendid, noble, marvelous, perisseutic, hyperballic, anecdiegetic, anexereunetic, anexichniastic. Pity, oh pity the of glory. (Oh Peter, Peter, who taught you to use such splendid and majestic terms as aneclaletic), who does not vibrate with a soul-stirring excitement as he explores the heights sublime, glimpsing horizons fairer far than any sunset and feels as he approaches a hitherto untraversed area of beauty: "We were the first that ever burst into that silent sea." Oh, the glory of it, to open, to expound, to interpret with heart and soul and mind and strength the Word revealed in its totality, the Word incarnate in all its glory, to lay it and to lay Him upon the deceased heart of humanity. This is our duty and is our daily delight. A life of infinite expansions, transcendent, surpassing the glory that excelleth, demanding the highest concentration of our highest powers, of prayer, study, scholarship, earnestness. Oh, to be the number of those who are aflame with certainty, not obsessed with problems, cool and clever. Anointed with fresh oil, inflamed with the fire that never goes out.

And the champion is a born propagandist, or, rather, a born-again propagandist. Applauded or unapplauded, he fights as the happy warrior the good fight of faith. With a cheerful confidence he says: "I will speak of Thy testimonies also before kings and will not be ashamed" (Ps. 110:45), i. e., the kings of science, philosophy and of theology. Yea, even in the very heart of the Empire and before the mighty on their thrones, he says I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ. He knows that he has the message for all the ages, for this age and every other. The man needed is not the man with a message, but the message.

He catches the glory of 2 Cor. 3:8-11; 4:4-6, the glory that excelleth. Oh, brother, we talk too much of the difficulties and peculiarities of this age. We cannot live on the yesterdays of Wycliffe. Fifty years has changed everything except the human heart and the everlasting Gospel. Telegraphs, telephones, gramophones, aeroplanes, microphones, radios; these are but the surface of things; souls are ever the same. To us our Lord has given the invaluable opportunity. And all the clamor and cross-currents and changing phrases of modern invention and criticism, these are but the accidents, the changeable phenomena on the surface of the great stream. But the great unchangeable substance, essence, the hypostasis, is the heart, the soul, the nature of man. What if the critics are abroad! What if the age is critical and the young impatient! What if scholarship is potent and claiming to be almost omniscient, typhotic (1 Tim. 3:6), intoxicated with conceit. Ours it is to speak to hearts, to souls, to startle them out of themselves to startle them out of their luxury and pleasures and thou that sleepest" cry, with an Isa. 60:1 and an Eph. 5:13 cry. Oh, the glory of it! Oh, the glory of it!

Oh, to be young today; oh, to have the promise of a life dedicated to such a work, the exposition of such a Word, the fellowship and encouragement of such a Master. Such a vocation.

And so we go into the fight as champions for Wycliffe and its work. We will stand for fraternity, the position and tradition of Cramner and our reformers versus the isolation of sacerdotalism. We will stand for scholarship, not the unitarianized scholarship of rationalism, not the pseudonymous science (1 Tim. 6:20), but the deeper knowledge, Pauline, Johannine, Petrine, the pleroma of Christ. We will stand for Churchmanship, loyal, unashamed, faithful and true; Churchmen who need not be ashamed of the Prayer Book in its totality, and the Church of England, Apostolic, Catholic, Protestant, Reformed. And, above all, as Abdiel, faithful found, we will stand for Evangelicalism, men of pronounced opinions, men who leave a mark, not a smudge, blurred and indistinct. Oh, what a call this is for men who have not lost their first love for God to go out and touch those who know not Christ and His life.

What a moment this is in the history of Canada for men whose hearts God has touched to speak a word for the Lord who bought them. Has such a call for service ever been heard in our Church's history?

Supreme above all questions for us today is the question: Can God, will God, revive the Church through us? Are we fit for the great opportunity? Have we faith enough and love enough and life enough to measure up to the grandeur of the opening door? Champions, oh, champions, take up the task eternal and the burden of the Gospel. Anointed with fresh oil, inflamed with fire, go out into a new and mightier world. On, on, in compact ranks with accessions ever rising to fill our places when we fall. Champions, oh, champions. On and on. On through battle, through defeat. Ever moving, never stopping, single or to-together, onward with the Wycliffe movement. Oh, champion, champions! Truth is with us, God is for us. Oh, ye young men and fervent. Oh, you elder, thoughtful, firmer, never must we be divided. We must ever be united. Till we hear the Trumpet sounding, till the Day break with the dawn call. Swift to the head of the churches. Swift, swift, spring to your places as leaders for Christ, for Wycliffe, for the Gospel. Champions, oh, champions!

THE HOLY SPIRIT AND SIN

By Kenneth Mackenzie

IMMANUEL KANT declared, "A Supreme Being is for the speculative reason a mere ideal, the objective quality of which can neither be proven nor disproven by pure reason. The accurate conception of a Supreme Being which every theology requires is furnished by transcendent theology alone. Professor Louba, of Bryn Mawr, avers, "Any god, whether of the Hindoos, Mohammedans, Jews or Christians, is but a subjective reality". The issue of Will Durant's "The Story of Philosophy" led many to hope that he would weave into the philosophical world the Christian faith and its exalted standards. This, he coldly refused to attempt; and his subesquent writings confirm our suspicion that neither he nor any man can do it. Philosophy and the Christian faith will not emulsify. And for the supreme reason that Christianity deals, as no system of thought or religion can, with the problem of sin, its author, origin, ravages, conquest and final extinction.

The horrible thing is here; call it by what name we will. Its character has not changed with all the changing years. It may assume modern attire, operating in a less brutal way, may so completely disguise itself as to allure the unwary, but it is the identical criminal that has ever destroyed the peace of men and wrought havoc in lives and destiny. It is mere childish dreaming to state that it does not exist. The victim of Bright's disease may be told by a competent physician that from the look of his eye, the gait that he walks, if nothing more, he will have but six months to live. The patient may declare in derision that he is only a bit weak and needs a tonic. But scientific knowledge is superior to personal reasonings. Denying the fact cannot remove it; and the end justifies the diagnosis. In the final analysis, our Christian faith has this criterion: Man is the same, sin is the identical thing it always has been; God has not changed; the need for the disposal of this blight upon humanity is as imperative as ever.

Leaving the speculative field and turning to the revelative, we discover that sin has four definitions: It is the transgression of the Law (1 John 3:4). In order that we should know the love of God, we must first realize His justice. It is unrighteousness (1 John 5:17), and that carries its own definition. It is leaving undone the thing that should be done (James 4:17), and of that nothing need be said. "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin" (Rom. 14:23). Of this a few words may be suggestive. Lack of faith pained our Lord's heart (Matt. 14:31; Mark 4:40; John 20:24-29); He was inspired with gladness when He found it (Matt. 8:10; 15:28); and in each instance His joy was increased because it was a Gentile who offered this tribute of trust. We all know that skepticism is the root sin of many Christians. We all hurt God's heart when we doubt Him. Observe, too, in this text (Rom. 14:23), that the strength of the little word ek, translated into our word of, implies that whatsoever is not born of faith is sin; for the faith that will win conquest must be begotten in us by the indwelling Spirit, for faith is His bestowment (Gal. 5:22, 23; Eph. 2:8).

But individual sins do not cover the entire range of the study. While it was predicated of the Lord Jesus that He should save His people from their sins (Matt. 1:21), John Baptist announces Him as the Lamb of God who should take away the sin of the world (John 1:29). Here, then, is the deeper significance. What is sin?

We have to thank Herbert Spencer for aiding us in our quest, though he was not conscious of such a ministry. His definition of life was, "Correspondence with environment". That is to say that when a man is in correspondence with the atmosphere, he will not have lung trouble; when he is in correspondence with his food, he will not be afflicted with indigestion, and so on. Death always results from some lack of correspondence, externally or inwardly.

Now God is our environment; and sin indicates that we are out of correspondence with Him. The first man exhibited this fact in his confession, "I was afraid and hid myself" (Gen. 3:10). Unqualifiedly an innoculation of dismay had been administered by the subtle tempter who had allured him from the hallowed fellowship which had made him the joy of the God who had created him. And we may confidently affirm that everywhere there lurks in the hearts of men this dread of God which is thus discovered to be the universal malady.

Christianity is the only religious system, as we have noted, that takes this problem in hand; and sees it solved to the uttermost of the power of God, to effect its final conquest. We plead imploringly that men shall not be content with Christian ethics, with an admiration of the matchless Man of Galilee; but look deep into their hearts to find this rotten spot, and acknowledge their inability to remove it. Men may talk glibly of religious things, may discuss theology with an easy complaisance; but the thought of God is yet a terror to their hearts, though they will not admit it. To remove it, root and branch, is the intent of our Lord's redemption. And His great soul is wounded today, not alone because of flagrant iniquity which flaunts itself impudently all over God's fair earth, but that men are beguiling themselves in the delusion regarding their alienation from Him. "Salvation by character" is the opiate. Well may He have looked across the ages into this day when He declared, "This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world and men love darkness rather than light" (John 3:19). To play with sin as we have discovered it to be, call it by mild names, deny its existence, to laugh the whole tragedy off the stage of life, is to irreparably grieve the Holy Spirit of God.

Our plea then is that until that Holy Spirit is accorded His divinely appointed place in disclosing to obedient souls the nature and effect of sin, there can be no solution of this lamentable situation. And to this end our Lord defined the mission of the Spirit in the words, "He shall reprove the world of sin" (John 16:8). In this process He unfolds to seeking souls a sense of shame; He causes us to examine ourselves; He convinces us of our need of salvation; He brings to light the dark things of our inner being; He exposes to us the weakness of our mortal nature; He impels us to be honest with God and ourselves. For there can be no real transfiguration of character until, with the Cross before our vision, we cry out with David, "Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me and know my thoughts; and see if there be any way of pain in me; and lead me in the way everlasting" (Ps. 139:23, 24).

Perhaps David best expresses the operation of the Spirit in the revealing of sin to the heart by his own experience. He was stung to the quick when Nathan pointed at him the finger of divine judgment, and in God's behalf uttered the sentence, "Thou art the man" (2 Sam. 12:13). But that was not the whole searching, scorching process. When David had reached the conviction that against God Himself, his crime had been committed, he manifested the normal Christian attitude, that sin is what it is, whether operative in commission of wrong, or unrepented as a stain of inner impurity and alienation from God, by the effect it had upon God Himself. "Against thee, thee only have I sinned and done this evil in thy sight" (Ps. 51:4). The fact that he cries with a breaking heart, later in the Psalm, "Take not thy Holy Spirit from me" (vs. 11), affords ample proof that the revelation of his sin, even to him, who had not our spiritual privileges and insight through the Cross, came through the Holy Spirit. And, unquestionably, he found a new inspiration in the conviction that he should be quickened and energized, not by self-domination, but according to the test, "What does He think of this? How would He be affected? What would He have me do? As we read His life from that on, how humbly does He deport Himself. He has found the secret which is ours to know in full. As we obtain the knowledge of the Son which is God's to bestow; as we delight in the knowledge of the Father, as our Lord Jesus knows Him (Matt. 11:27), the Spirit, who is the medium of this communication, leads us to understand whom we have believed (2 Tim. 1:12), and like Him to love righteousness and hate iniquity (Heb. 1:9).

Looking back over our past, we may come to the point of retrospect, seeing ourselves as once "Dead in sins; walking according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air; having our manner of life as others in the desires of the flesh and self; by nature the children of wrath" (Eph. 2:1-10), now sitting with Christ in the heavenlies (vs. 6), born of the Spirit, led of the Spirit, filled with the Spirit according to our capacity to receive. All He asks is that we may be willing in the day of His power (Ps. 110:3). And thank Him with jubilant hearts, that day is now.

Prepared by J. T. Bougher.

Note: In this new series of studies effort will be made to set forth in brief form wondrous things that God would have us know as told in His own eternal words.

Lesson No. 10.
Topic—Wonderful Truths About the Lord Jesus.
Not generally known, and the world inclined to ignore.

Every one should frequently and carefully read John 1: 1-14; Heb. 1:1-12; Col. 1:1-29; wherein we find a sublime description of the wonderful Creator of all things, and in Rev. 1:10 to 18, a vivid portrayal of our Risen Lord as revealed to St. John in the Patmas vision. The One in whom "dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily", and in whom are hid all the treasurers of wisdom and knowledge. —Col. 2:3.

Below are a few wondrous truths concerning this rejected King of Glory, before whom every knee shall some day bow.—Rom. 14:11; even Jesus, "who delivered us from the wrath to come"—1 Thess. 1:10. We can become related to Him through the new birth.—John 3:5-8.

1. He was ever with the Father.—John 17:5.
2. He made this world.—John 1:10.
3. He was God manifest in the flesh.—2 Cor. 5:19.
4. Came to be King of Israel.—Luke 1:32.
5. Was rejected and crucified.—Matt. 27:—
6. Buried; arose; ascended.—Luke 24:51.
7. Will surely return.—Acts 1:11.
8. He is now our Intercessor. and Priest.—Heb. 10:24-9:24.
9. He saved us.—2 Tim. 1:9.
10. Redeemed us by His Blood.—Col. 1:14.
11. Forgives our sins.—1 John 1:9.
12. Keeps us secure.—2 Tim. 1:12.
13. Gives us access to God.—Heb. 10:19.
14. Made us Joint-Heirs.—Rom. 8:17.
15. Gives us Eternal Life.—John 10:28.
16. Will present us faultless.—Jude 1:24.
17. Will reward us.—Rev. 22:12.
18. Made us Sons of God.—1 John 3:1, 2.
19. Made us Kings and Priests.—Rev. 1:5, 6.
20. May soon call us to be with Him.—John 14:3.
21. Will return in great power to set up His Kingdom.—Rev. 19:—
22. Will sentence unbelievers.—Rev. 20:5.
23. Will put Satan in the pit.—Rev. 20:2.
24. Will correct present world troubles.—Isa. 24:23.
25. Will reign 1,000 years on earth.—Rev.20:4.

Don't you want to know Him, ere it be too late!

For to all of those who know Him,
Will the night be turned to day,
When the blessed morning cometh,
And the shadows flee away.

"Whither I go ye cannot come . . . if ye believe not that I am He."—John 8:22-24.

IRENAEUS ON THE SCRIPTURES

By the Reverend James W. Morris, D. D.

IRENAEUS lived in the latter part of the Second Century. His active life extends from about 170 A. D., to near the close of the century. He was from Asia Minor, and had been in early manhood a pupil of the famous Polycarp, Bishop of Smyrna; and Polycarp was a disciple of St. John. So that between Irenaeus and St. John there was only one human link. Dr. C. Walker, at the Virginia Seminary, was wont to tell his classes that the witness of Irenaeus to the person and the teachings of St. John, was as strong as theirs of the sayings and person of Dr. Sparrow. Irenaeus knew of St. John through Polycarp, just as those students knew of Dr. Sparrow through Dr. Walker. Therefore, the testimony of Irenaeus to the value of Holy Scripture as the divine rule of faith and practice, is peculiarly impressive.

Here are some of the statements he makes:

"We have come to know the plan of our Salvation through none others than those through whom the Gospel came to us. This Gospel they then preached, it is true, but afterwards by the will of God delivered to us in the Scriptures to be the pillar and foundation of the faith."

"We, following the one and only God, as Teacher, and taking His words as our rule of truth, always teach the same things on the same points." (Note here Irenaeus' rule for unity of teaching in the Church.)

"Having the truth itself as our rule and the testimony respecting God placed clearly before us, we ought not to cast away the firm and true knowledge of God."

Speaking of heretics, he says this: "When reproved out of the Scriptures, they immediately begin to accuse (or blame) the Scriptures themselves, on the ground that they are not correct, or not of authority, or because the truth cannot be discovered in them by men who do not know tradition, asserting that the truth was not delivered in writing, but by word of mouth."

Heretics of our day run true to this Second Century type.

"If you use (or by using) those proofs derived from the Scriptures, you may easily overturn, as we have demonstrated, all the heretical notions that were put forward afterwards."

"Read very diligently that Gospel that has been given us by the Apostles and read very diligently the prophets, and you will find the whole course of action of our Lord, as well as His whole doctrine and passion proclaimed in them."

"We know well (or knowing well) that the Scriptures are perfect as having been uttered by the Word of God and His Spirit; but we in proportion as we are inferior and far removed from the Word of God and His Spirit, so far we lack the knowledge of His mysteries."

Should not our modern critics, who are so busily engaged in pointing out, to the delectation of unbelievers, the imperfections of the Scriptures, take a word of warning from this disciple of Polycarp? He tells us that he was often told by old Polycarp the things that St. John said and that they were all "according to the Scriptures". He further declares that "the precepts of the consummate life are in both Testaments". Have the "scientific" critics of our precious Old and New Testaments become so superior and so close to the Word and His Spirit, as to be able to solve all their mysteries—even to the point of correcting their imperfections, both as to the facts related and as to moral teaching inculcated? The purged, pruned and expurgated text of the Bible from Genesis to Revelation as held by modern advanced critics, most of them admired teachers and doctors of theology, would, if it should be published, fill with sorrowful wonder the millions of devout Christians who love their Bible and read it as verily God's Word written.

May the Lord raise us up many with the faith and influence of Irenaeus, the great Bishop of Lyons.

THE SURRENDERED LIFE---IN CHRIST

By Frank Cox

THE main contributor this week to the column is the Rev. R. Maxwell Bradner, rector of the Church of the Nativity, Brooklyn, N. Y. He makes a stirring plea to men to return to the preaching of the Gospel of Redemption, the Good News that Christ can set men free from self and sin, and can enable them to reign in life by His aid.

The Ministry of the Priesthood.

"God gave unto us the ministry of reconciliation."—2 Cor. 5:18.

That is St. Paul's conclusion of the work of the ministry. The minister or priest therefore is an "ambassador" for Christ to reconcile others to God through Christ. "We pray you on behalf of Christ, be ye reconciled to God." What a wondrous message that is. The marvel is that ministers ever waste their time in preaching anything else, for time can never exhaust the theme of the love of God in Christ Jesus to sinful men.

That is what "the ministry of reconciliation means". It means that God has placed in us who are called to the ministry the privilege of intreating men, on behalf of Christ, to be at peace with God—to be restored to friendship and harmony with God. God has placed in the ministry the power to bring men to Him through the Atonement of the Lord Jesus on the Cross. What a great responsibility rests upon us as "ambassadors for Christ", yet what a glorious calling, to proclaim "in Christ's stead", the good news of the forgiveness of sins through the Blood of Jesus to all who will accept it. Men may fly the Atlantic and be feted as heroes—men may win golf trophies and tennis tournaments and see their pictures in every newspaper in the world—men may become princes in commerce and presidents of banks and stand before kings, but none of these things, however great, can compare with the joy of being a preacher of the glorious Gospel of the grace of God. To bring to suffering, sinful men and women the glad news of a full and free salvation through faith in the Lord Jesus is the work committed unto us. Force can never make a bad man good. Bars and bolts and prison cells and man-made reform laws cannot extend the Kingdom of God nor touch a man's heart and make him a new creation in Christ Jesus. Nothing but the message of the Cross can do it, for there is a wonderful power in the Blood which can bring peace into every troubled soul. This is the ministry of reconciliation. It is the old-fashioned Gospel, but it is the only Gospel worth preaching. "But how can they hear without a preacher?" How can they hear unless the ministers of the Church cease wasting time trying to instruct sinners in morals. We cannot make the water in the well pure by painting the outside of the village pump.

What is wrong with the Church? Just this: Preachers are depending upon Geneva, London, Washington and limitation of armaments, instead of upon God. We lack faith in the power of the Gospel. We need conversion. We need "to be born again". We need contact with Jesus, for God's way of reformation is through regeneration, "Ye must be born again", and when once a man is born again he becomes a member of the true Church. Oh, this is the time for preaching the Gospel to every creature. "Unity of Christendom." It is a nice phrase. We do not need it. It is a delusion and a snare. God has given unto us the ministry of reconciliation and it is ours to go out and bear the message in all its simplicity and power to those who are in darkness and in the shadow of death. "Now, then, we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God." Our credentials are stamped with the autograph of Jesus: "Go ye unto all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature."

Down in the human heart, crushed by the tempter,
Feelings lie buried that grace can restore,
Touched by a loving hand, wakened by kindness.
Chords that were broken will vibrate once more.
—Rev. R. Maxwell Bradner.

A concrete illustration of the truth of the above came to our attention a short time ago. We were about to go out to the street corner for our open air service before the regular evening service. Some good friends tried to dissuade us because it was a trifle chilly, and they were afraid that we might injure our voices. However, we went, and at the end a man who had been listening intently rushed up to us and said, "Can God save a drunkard"?

We answered with conviction, "He surely can". Then He will have to save me, for I cannot save myself," the man replied.

We invited him into the church for the service, and introduced him to two young workers who would explain things to him more fully. After the service was over he told us the following story: It seems that he had been at the front during the war, leaving his wife and two children in this country. He was brought back in a serious condition from wounds. After he recovered sufficiently he asked the nurse to call his home. His sister came to the hospital, and only then he learned that his wife and children had perished in the influenza epidemic. The news threw him into despair, and having no vital religious experience, he took to drink. His college degree and all that it stands for was not sufficient to hold him straight.

He had pawned everything that he possessed in his last spree, and that night did not know what he was to do. He came to the outdoor meeting to pass the time, was struck by the announcement that God could help any one, and decided to find out more. He said on leaving, "I came looking for help and I have found what I wanted."

He has since found a position, and goes about his work full of thankfulness for what God has done. Once more we see that God's redeeming power can save when everything else has failed.

Book Reviews

THE KESWICK WEEK: Published in London. U. S. Agents, W. D. Blessing Co., 63 East Adams Street, Chicago, Ill.

This report of the fifty-second convention of Evangelicals at Keswick, England, is a treasury of the old-fashioned Gospel teaching and preaching. If any of our clergy desire refreshment and suggestions for preaching, they may find both in these addresses. Beginning with the initial sermon by the Rev. Dr. Charles Inwood, "A Fresh Touch of Pentecost Needed", in the great tent on Saturday night, to the address of the Rev. Dr. W. Graham Scroggie, "The Programme of Christian Calling and Privilege", on Sunday morning, July 24, a week later, the book is filled with spiritual food of a very high order.

There are over thirty sermons and addresses. Some of the titles are as follows:

"The Secret of Spiritual Strength."
"The Tragedy of a Human Soul."
"The Blood That Cleanses From All Sin."
"From Carnal to Spiritual."
"Doing the Will of God."
"The Spirit Filled Life."
"The Divine Worker and His Work."
"Have Ye Received the Holy Ghost," etc.

Some of these addresses are of unusual power. "The Tragedy of a Human Soul" is a study of Peter's denial, by Gordon B. Watt. It is a piece of very careful and thoughtful work. The illustrations are very strong. "God's Three Gifts to Men," His Son, The Holy Scriptures and The Holy Spirit, is also very well worked out and very brief. "From Carnal to Spiritual" is an illustration of how men or women can be for years members of Churches and not converted.

"Lessons from Mountains of Scriptures" is a study that goes down to the heart of the Gospel, the secret of the crucifixion of self.

"The Birthright of Every Child of God" is shown to be "The law of the Spirit of Life in Christ Jesus hath set me free from the law of sin and death".

"As He is, So Are We in This World" shows how the most profound truths can be expressed in monosyllables. The writings of St. John are rich in simple statements of the most vital truths. Note the first fourteen verses of his Gospel. Ten great facts are recorded, nearly all in monosyllables. These verses are written in the easiest Greek of the New Testament. Isn't all this an evidence of the work of the Holy Spirit guiding the writer. Any ordinary philosopher would have written several volumes on these great mysteries. As a matter of fact a small library of books have been written on the "Logos" alone.

"Keswick Week" is quarto in size, well printed, in paper covers, price one dollar.

LIFE RADIANT: By Rev. Canon F. J. Horsfield, D. D. Published by Marshall Brothers, London. Price, 2-6.

This is a truly helpful book of one hundred and seven pages, filled with the purest spiritual teaching. It is a soul tonic, a quickener of the inner life and a thoroughly transparent unfolding of the true life of a child of God. The author plumbs the depths of spiritual experience and yet there is a gripping of one's interest in his orderly development of the radiant life that holds attention and inspires one to read to the end. It is a feast for those hungering for a deeper spiritual life. It is comforting and reassuring and shows the way of victory in Christ. It sets forth the glory and the privileges and possibilities of the Christian life under the nine fold chapters The Radiant Life, The Surrendered Life, The Spirit-Filled Life, The Life That Glorifies Christ, The Care-Free Life, Life on the Heights, Lives Handed Over, The Life of Service, The Satisfied Life.

It is a book that will meet your needs—will inspire you and call forth prayer and praise. You could not read it without being benefited. We know of no teaching so sorely needed as that given here and wish for it a wide reading.

THE ANGLICAN EPISCOPATE OF CANADA AND NEWFOUNDLAND: By O. R. Rowley.

This volume is ready for publication. It will contain biographical sketches of the eighty-one Bishops consecrated for the Church in Canada, beginning with Charles Inglis, at one time rector of Trinity Church, New York, who became First Bishop of Nova Scotia, and ending with Bishop Sherman of Calgary, together with the five Bishops of the Church in Newfoundland. There is in addition a large amount of interesting information about the episcopate and dioceses in Canada and Newfoundland, together with one hundred half-tone portraits showing all the Bishops in Episcopal robes.

The work is the result of vast labor and research extending over twenty years, by Mr. O. R. Rowley, of Montreal. The publishers require seven hundred advance subscriptions before the work will be undertaken. This should not be difficult, as the price is $3 and $4, in purple paper, or purple cloth, respectively, plus postage of about twenty-five cents. Remittance is not required until after the book is received from the publishers. It has the recommendations of the Archbishop of Canterbury, who has written a foreword, as well as the Primates of all Canada. There will doubtless be a large number of Churchmen in the United States who will order one or more copies.

THE ORDER OF THE THOUSANDFOLD

ALMIGHTY God, our Heavenly Father, Who with Thy Son Jesus Christ, has given unto us all things in heaven and earth, we beseech Thee to make us a thousandfold more useful to Thee than ever before, so that Thy power and blessing may flow through us to multitudes of others who are in need, and also make us more willing and loving servants of Thine to Thy honor and glory for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

Origin.

The Order owes its origin to the prayer during the World War of a missionary, Archdeacon Frederick W. Neve, D. D., Ivy Depot, Virginia, to be made a thousandfold more useful to God than ever before so that he could help make a new and better world after the war.

Each day, at noon, he went to pray alone in his church in the mountains of Virginia, close to his home. Often he invited his parishioners to join him in this sacred custom, but these good people seldom found time from their daily labors. Nevertheless he always tolled the church bell in the hope that his people would pause in their work for a moment to offer up a prayer.

One day, when he was kneeling before the altar, his little four-year-old girl stole into the church and knelt beside him; she had brought her doll which was made to kneel also. Evidently the thought had come into the child's mind that he was alone and needed help, and so she had tried to bring all the help and reinforcement she could. After that she went to the church every day when she heard the noon-day bell.

The story of this simple incident spread far and wide, bringing about wonderful results. Encouraged by this, and other events, to believe that his prayer was being answered, he conceived the idea of enlisting others in this venture of faith and started the movement in the form of The Order of the Thousandfold.

Purpose of the Order.

The purpose of The Order is to increase the power and usefulness of the children of God, for the building up of His Kingdom, by inspiring them to draw by faith and prayer upon the infinite resources placed at our disposal by our Lord Jesus Christ.

Rules.

1. To pray earnestly every day to be made a thousandfold more useful to God than ever before. This does not mean, necessarily, any increase in outward activities, for the time of some may be fully occupied, but an increase in spiritual power and energy, so that what is done and said may exert an influence of such power and far reaching effect as to really amount to a thousandfold increase in spiritual efficiency.

2. To seek to interest others in The Order.

Membership.

Membership in The Order is open to every one. There are no dues and one need not even wait to be enrolled. To become a member all one has to do is to comply with its rules.

Possibilities.

There are passages in the New Testament which seem clearly to indicate the almost limitless possibilities of the spiritual life: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name He will give it you. Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my name; ask and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full." St. John 16:23-24. And this wonderful promise and invitation: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father." St. John 14:12.

There are many Christian people who would like to do good if they only knew the way, but their modesty and feeling of unfitness holds them back. By making it a habit to pray earnestly every day for a thousandfold increase in usefulness our faith is wonderfully quickened. A new courage takes possession of us, which enables us to reach out after opportunities of service, and ways are mysteriously opened for our influence to flow forth and reach the lives of others.

Man working through nature has wrought mighty wonders, and has outwardly transformed the world. God working through man can work greater wonders still and can bring about a moral and spiritual transformation beside which the physical will seem insignificant.

When we place ourselves in Christ's hands, as instruments for Him to use in any way He chooses, then it is He who is working, and we are simply the means that He uses for the carrying on of His work, and failure is out of the question, for Christ cannot fail. St. Paul realized this when he said, "I can of mine ownself do nothing", but "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

A JOY.

Mr. Editor:

This blessed paper is a joy in my home, and a weekly anticipation since its resurrection. The Church at large owes you a debt. With grateful acknowledgment and wishing I could send it to an hundred homes.

BEST WISHES.

Mr. Editor:

Best wishes for the "Southern Churchman", always get something spiritually strong from its columns. I like a Church paper that really believes in Jesus Christ as the Son of the Living God. I have no apology to make, for, my friend, I know Him.

ON DEUTERONOMY.

Mr. Editor:

I enjoyed reading the article in The Churchman on Deuteronomy by Dr. Morris. I have always objected to the idea that it was put over on King Josiah by the High Priest. It seems to me that Jeremiah would have had something to say about it if it had been so. Besides, we read of King Jehoshaphat telling the Levites to instruct the people out of the law.

FREDERICK W. NEVE.

COMPREHENSIVE.

Mr. Editor:

Enclosed find subscription for two years, continuing my subscription of the year passed.

May I say that I have enjoyed this Church paper, which I find more comprehensive, more full of the right spirit of a Church paper, and full of more information in regard to the unprejudiced news of our Church work in general, than any of the other three papers (Church) that I now subscribe for and were I to drop any it would not be your paper.

"THE STREETS OF NAZARETH."

Mr. Editor:

Some weeks ago you re-printed a little poem, "The Streets of Nazareth", by Nettie Rooker, and soon afterwards a correspondent of yours (whose name I have forgotten) thought there had been a mistake made in attributing it to her.

Her home was in Sevenoaks, Kent, England, and previous to her death, several years ago, she had sent me, from time to time, little poems of her own, though not this one. I had seen it before, however, in print, with her signature. In a recent letter from her sister in Sevenoaks, she says, in reply to an enquiry from me: "Yes, those verses, 'The Streets of Nazareth', were hers. When they first came out she just, as a nom-de-plume, the name of 'Anne Jay'."

So this explains any uncertainty as to the author.

A WELCOME VISITOR.

Mr. Editor:

Through the kindness of some unknown person, I have been receiving The Southern Churchman for some time, and I want to thank the sender very heartily for this splendid contribution to my desk.

The paper is very fine, stands for the Bible and Christianity in its historic and spiritual integrity, and certainly is a welcome visitor to my study.

Congratulating you upon the conduct of the paper, and wishing you great success in this great field of Christian service.

THE "HIGHER" CRITIC."

Mr. Editor:

I am again tempted to supplement Mr. Morris—this time on the authorship of Deuteronomy. I first came across the "Higher" Critic in the person of my rector many years ago. He was a Hebrew Prixeman in Dublin University. He taught me some Hebrew, and incidentally a little Higher Criticism. I still think as I did then—that "scientific" is the last term to be applied to such critics. Their work seemed to me then as now, to be a lost, wandering in trackless, arid wastes of reckless assertions, convenient assumptions, finical meanderings, and apriori suppositions ridden to death, all leading to so-called facts bred of fantastic theories.

To my kind teacher I made this challenge then, as I do now to the critics. Make an experimental scientific test, viz., take any works of modern fiction written by collaborators, of which there are many examples; apply your methods of dissection to determine what parts each author contributed. Then compare your results with the original MSS. Go easy at first, with works by two joint authors, and work back to writings of several authors together. Dumas the elder had for instance, many co-workers, and other authors more modern did the same.

Has such a scientific test ever been tried out? Not that I know. I only know that my kind rector hotly scouted my proposed test, as no doubt would his fellow critics higher up. Yet, it is a far simpler problem, dealing with modern spoken language in place of one long dead—the undoubted sole writings of the collaborators are accessible, and in some cases the authors themselves. Why is such a test not made? Because the fine, fragile web spun by the spider-critics could not catch a single fly of established fact!

Bishop Nelson Explains Catholic Congress.

In view of the conflicting ideas which have been published concerning the Third Catholic Congress of the Episcopal Church, it seems right that I should make a brief statement of matters in which I have accurate information, because the Congress met in Albany on my invitation, and because I was its Honorary President.

I invited the Congress to meet in the Cathedral of All Saints because I knew that it would stand clearly and loyally for the historic position of the Episcopal Church as a part of the One Holy Catholic and Apostolic Church of Christ. I believed further that the eminent clergymen and laymen who should be selected to make addresses on subjects of vital importance would stimulate interest in religion and impart spiritual benefit to their hearers.

Looking back to the services and meetings of the congress I feel free to say that my hopes and expectations have been fully realized.

The service which was held in the Cathedral on October 26 was dignified, beautiful and deeply devotional. More than three thousand people took part in the service which was rendered in true obedience to the Ritual of the Book of Common Prayer and with a richness of ceremonial suited to an occasion of extraordinary importance.

Some questions have been asked as to the meaning of the word "pontificate" as descriptive of my part in the service. It means that I took the part assigned to the Bishop in the Book of Common Prayer, of which the most important features are his pronouncement of Absolution after the General Confession, and his blessing of the people at the close of the service.

People who came from the Pacific coast as well as from nearer points assured me that the service repaid them for their journey, and I am thankful that I was able to have part in an act of worship which brought joy and comfort to such a devout multitude.

The papers which were read at the Armory were of an especially high order; and, while some of them dealt with matters in which there is room for differing opinions, they were notable for their freedom from controversial spirit and for their loyalty to the authorized teachings of the Church.

Having outlined the main features of the Congress as these present themselves to my mind, I desire to deal briefly with a spiritual principle which seems to me to be more important than any feature of the Congress services and sessions. I refer to the spirit of charity "without which all our doings are nothing worth".

I was brought up in the kindly nurture of the Episcopal Church from my earliest childhood, and I have served in its Sacred Ministry for nearly forty-five years, more than half of which has been in the episcopate.

I love this Church and believe in it with all my heart and soul and mind. Nothing can shake my allegiance to its sacred ways, its faith, its ministry and its sacraments, but this loyalty does not require of me that I should withhold respect and affection from those who may not see through my eyes or share my strong convictions. I entertain no feeling of animosity toward those within my Church who are unable to agree with me. I respect the convictions of all Christians of every name, and I recognize in God's people of an earlier covenant a true spirituality and a large hearted charity which has been made manifest in many generous deeds.

Charity is the very bond of peace and all virtue, without which man stands dead in the sight of God. May God fill our hearts with His Spirit of loving kindness so that we may love one another in Him.

Richard H. Nelson,
Bishop of Albany.

Course of Bible Studies.

A course of Bible lessons has been arranged for by the National Brotherhood of St. Andrew for the use of Brotherhood Men's Bible Classes and any others who may desire, according to General Secretary Leon C. Palmer, and will be ready for use beginning January 1. The subject of the first six months' course will be "The Gospel of the Son of God", as given in the Gospel according to St. Mark; this will be followed by a six months' course on "The Beginning of the Church", based on the Book of Acts.

The general plan of the course is to take the outline suggested by the International Council of Religious Education, with the general helps issued by publishers of recognized standing, and supplement these with a booklet issued quarterly adapting them to the needs and teachings of the Church. These booklets are being prepared by a group of representative Church leaders and theologians, including the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Chairman of the National Commission on Evangelism; the Rt. Rev. Campbell Gray, D. D., Bishop of Northern Indiana; the Very Rev. Theodore R. Ludlow, Secretary for Adult Education in the Department of Religious Education of the National Council; the Very Rev. Charles N. Lathrop, D. D., Executive Secretary, and the Rev. H. W. Foreman, Secretary for Rural Work in the Department of Christian Social Service; Dr. Burton Scott Easton, Dr. Charles H. Boynton and Prof. D. F. Forrester, of the General Theological Seminary; Dr. Gardiner L. Tucker, Executive Secretary of the Department of Religious Education in the Province of Sewanee, and Dr. Floyd W. Tomkins, rector of Holy Trinity Church, Philadelphia.

It is expected that the price of the complete course with all helps for the teacher will be $2, while the pamphlets giving the weekly lessons for the members of the class will be forty cents per annum. Orders may be addressed to the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, Church, 202 South Nineteenth Street, Philadelphia.

Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions.

The Tenth Quadrennial Convention of the Student Voluneer Movement will meet in the Masonic Temple Auditorium, Detroit, Michigan, December 28, 1927, to January 1, 1928. Three thousand and five hundred student delegates are expected, representing nearly all the colleges in the United States and Canada; several hundred students from other lands will be in attendance, together with missionaries, mission board secretaries, editors of the religious press, and others. The grand total will be five thousand—the capacity limit of the auditorium.

Not only will there be missionary speakers in the convention, but Christian nationals of other lands are being invited to present the Christian movement as it functions in their native lands. Dr. Francis Wei, President of Boone University in Wuchang, China, has already agreed to come from England, where he is at present studying in the University of London.

One of the unique features of the convention will be the forum discussion groups in which the students will have the freest opportunity to ask questions of those who have had wide experience abroad, and discover for themselves the answers to questions about missions which perplex them. There will be about thirty of these groups meeting simultaneously.

In the afternoons there are to be demonstrations of various methods in missionary education, pageants, poster exhibits, dramatic presentations, international teas and so on. The opportunity to meet people from the four corners of the earth will be unequal.

This convention is the tenth in a long series of great missionary gatherings which have deeply affected the missionary life and that of the churches, and it bids fair to be one of the most significant of all, because of the exceptional conditions which the Christian forces face in the world today.

Seeking to Protect Human Life

The campaign which is being carried on this fall by the American Road Builders' Association in behalf of safety on the streets and highways, is eliciting much interest and support from the churches of the country.

The following resolution, emphasizing the moral aspects of the question, was adopted by the Federal Council of Churches at a recent meeting:

"The Administrative Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America would call the earnest attention of the churches, pastors, and Christian people to the appalling results of the disregard of human safety in the constantly increasing loss of human life caused by recklessness and selfishness in travel on the highways of the country and in the streets of our cities.

"Especially does a constant toll of the lives of little children bring daily unhappiness in multitudes of homes.

"We urge that the laws be of commensurate severity and that their enforcement be strict. We would suggest as more important, however, that pastors take appropriate opportunity to urge upon the people of their communities a unified effort to secure a voluntary restraint and considerateness, both upon the part of pedestrians and drivers, and we wish to commend heartily all such efforts."

This action gains vivid meaning when one reads the figures recently compiled by the United States Department of Commerce showing the number of people killed by automobiles. During the year ending August 13, 1927, no fewer than 6,993 men, women, and children lost their lives in motor casualties.

Because of the interest of the churches in the problem, the Rev. Chas. S. Macfarland, General Secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches, has been invited to give an address on the subject at the meeting of the American Road Builders' Association in Cleveland on January 10.

Golden Rule Sunday.

The International Golden Rule Sunday will be observed on December 4, 1927. "Whatsoever ye would that others should do unto you do ye even so unto them."

On this day the economies for our own meals are both to show us the simple fare given to our orphan wards among the Armenians, whose lives were saved by gifts from the United States, and also to enable us to send the amount of our saving to continue the service still required.

Summer Conference.

The next session of the Peninsular Summer Conference will be held at Ocean City, Maryland, June 24-29, inclusive. It is requested that all communications be addressed to the Secretary, the Rev. H. V. Saunders, St. Michaels, Maryland.

From China.

A cable from Bishop Roots in Hankow, received November 18, says:

There is no cause for alarm, new officials are friendly. Property, members of our mission, both natives and foreign, are all safe. Commission expected to arrive on the nineteenth.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. Geo. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.

Farewell Dinner.

The Richmond Clericus gave a farewell dinner to the Rev. W. E. Cox, rector of the Church of the Holy Comforter, on Monday, November 21, at Hotel Richmond. The addresses were made at the dinner by the Rev. W. H. Burkhardt, D. D., rector of Grace and Holy Trinity Church, on Our Common Fellowship, and by the Rev. G. MacLaren Brydon, Secretary of the Diocese, on Eleven Years of Service. After a reply by Mr. Cox, the Bishop, the Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D., said a few closing words and pronounced the benediction.

Mr. Cox, after eleven years of service as rector of the Church of the Holy Comforter, Richmond, has resigned to enter the missionary work of the Church in the Missionary District of Arizona, under Bishop Mitchell. Expression was made at the dinner of the deep appreciation of Mr. Cox's work in Richmond, and the high estimation in which he is held as a fellow worker by the clergy of the city. The Bishop in his closing address urged that in giving up one of our most useful clergy to the more difficult work of a pioneer field we should feel that Mr. Cox is our representative in that missionary jurisdiction and should show our interest in his work in every way that we can.

Mr. Cox will enter upon his new work in Arizona on December 1.

Young People's Work.

During the latter part of the month of October this diocese held a Training School for all Church Workers, Teachers and Leaders of the Youth of the Church. This school was held at Grace and Holy Trinity Church Parish House Richmond.

We had our National Secretary of New York on Young People's Work, Miss Clarice Lambright, as the leader of the Young People's Service League Groups of this school. From her enthusiasm for the youth of the Church we have taken new strength and hope.

Our League work is a young organization in years, but we have progressed far enough to have our Richmond Council. This Council is composed of two representative from each League in Richmond and vicinity. We meet bimonthly and discuss our problems. This Council with its officers and corps of workers visit among the parish leagues and leagues of the diocese and try to keep them up to the standard enthusiasm.

Alexandria is forming a Council such as the one in Richmond.

New Leagues are organized at:

St. John's Church, Tappahannock.

St. John's Church, West Point.

St. James' Church, Ashland.

The Leagues of Richmond have had an attendance contest, St. James' League, this city, having won the banner for the month of October. On November 26 there will be the Richmond Council meeting, which the Diocesan President, Mr. Martin Mason, of St. George's Church, Clarendon, will attend.

The other diocesan officers are:

First Vice-President—Miss Mary Nicol, Christ Church, Alexandria.

Second Vice-President—Mr. Asa Seeds, Christ Church, Charlottesville.

Third Vice-President—Mr. Thomas Reed, St. Thomas' Church, Richmond.

Secretary—Miss Natalie Saunders, St. John's Church, Richmond.

Treasurer—Miss Crystal Brown, Christ Church, Charlottesville.

NEW YORK.

Memorial Service.

On Sunday evening, November 13, at the Church of the Heavenly Rest and Beloved Disciple, 67 East Eighty-ninth Street, many of the city's most prominent military officers and former officers gathered to do honor to departed members in the first annual memorial service held by the New York Society of Military and Naval Officers of the World War. The service included the sounding of taps by a bugler in remembrance of those who died during the past year and the reading of the necrology by Brigadier-General George A. Wingate, followed by an address by the rector of the church, the Rev. Henry Darlington, D. D., who is chaplain of the organization.

Gifts to Chapel of St. Luke the Physician.

On the afternoon of Sunday, October 23, service was held in the Chapel of St. Luke the Physician at Sea View Hospital, Staten Island.

The Girls' Friendly of the various parishes on the Island, who for the last twelve years have been interested in the chaplain's work there, presented a Bishop's chair for the chapel. The Senior Branch also presented two pairs of brasses for the altar as a memorial to Miss Adelaide Malloy, for some years President of the Girls' Friendly of Staten Island.

These were dedicated by the chaplain, the Rev. A. M. Hildebrand.

The dedication address was made by Canon Pascal Harrower, rector of the Church of the Ascension, who has been identified with the work of the Girls' Friendly from its inception forty years ago, and response was made by the Rev. L. Ernest Sunderland, D. D., in behalf of the Protestant Episcopal City Mission Society, under whose auspices the work for all non-Roman Catholic Christians at Sea View Hospital is being carried on.

St. Barnabas' House.

St. Barnabas' House was the scene of an afternoon tea November 10, when the Social Service Branch of the Church of the Heavenly Rest and Beloved Disciple were the guests of the City Mission Society.

This is the first of a series of teas which St. Barnabas' House hopes to have the opportunity of giving to interested parish groups caring to inspect the work of this historic old shelter which for over sixty years has been giving temporary refuge to women and children left suddenly homeless.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

College of Preachers.

Fifteen clergymen from eleven states and the District of Columbia gathered the week of November 13, on Mount Saint Alban to participate in the initial conference of a series, which will be held throughout the year under the auspices of the College of Preachers of Washington Cathedral to provide inspiration and post-graduate training for preaching the messages of the various Church seasons.

The Rt. Rev. Philip M. Rhinelander, former Bishop of Pennsylvania, and Warden of the College, directed the studies. He was assisted by the Very Rev. H. E. W. Fosbroke, Dean of the General Theological Seminary, New York City.

Institute of Woman's Auxiliary.

The Third Annual Institute of the Woman's Auxiliary in this Diocese was held in Trinity Church, November 14 and 20.

Wednesday was the intensive day of the Institute with a program, including reports from the provincial representative on the work of the province, the Girls' Friendly Society, the Daughters of the King, the Church Periodical Club, the Colored members of the Auxiliary and a talk by Miss Sally Dean, of the National Headquarters of the Auxiliary, on the organizing of "B" (junior) branches of the Auxiliary.

Mrs. Edmund Lee, formerly of Anking, China, discussed "Our Responsibilities in China". Miss Boyer discussed education work and Miss Etta Ambler described her experiences as a missionary in Japan.

The afternoon session closed with a description of the work supported by the United Thank Offering. A mass meeting devoted to the subject of rural conditions was conducted by the Rev. Robert Johnston, Chairman of the Department of Missions of the Diocese.

In connection with the Institute there was a series of training classes also at Trinity Church, conducted by Miss Laura Boyer, Educational Secretary of the National Department of Missions.

Guild of the Nazarene.

Regular weekly meetings of the Guild of the Nazarene are held at St. Mark's Church on Friday evenings at eight P. M., when intercessory prayers are offered for all who request them. The Guild of St. Mark's Church recently made an annual Thank Offering to the Society of the Nazarene, which provided a large chair for the headquarters at Mountain Lakes, N. J., in memory of the Rev. Henry B. Wilson.

Dayton Westminster Choir.

The concert of the Dayton Westminster Choir given November 14, in Central High School Auditorium was largely attended by Church people and lovers of good music. This choir, which renders its entire program a capella is under the direction of John Finley Williamson, who, though recognized for his achievements as a conductor, is particularly outstanding in his efforts to raise the level of Church music. The famous choir was brought here under the auspices of the Washington Church Council and the Federation of Music Clubs. Fourteen foreign countries are included in a tour recently booked for the choir.

Union Service.

All Protestant Churches in Georgetown united in a Community Thanksgiving service on Thanksgiving Day at St. John's Church. The Rev. F. C. Reynolds, pastor of the Wesley M. E. Church, was chosen to be the preacher. The offering of this service was taken for the Aged Women's Home of Georgetown. The Rev. F. Bland Tucker is the rector of St. John's Church.

The Rev. J. J. D. Hall, of Philadelphia, who has been conducting a mission at Epiphany Chapel, consented to remain a week longer.

M. M. W.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

Conference of the Clergy.

Bishop Stires has called a conference of the clergy of the Diocese to meet in Garden City on November 21. Such a conference, lasting two days, was held in September of last year at Easthampton, and was of such value that many hoped it would be an annual event.

Fifty-fifth Anniversary.

The fifty-fifth anniversary of the Long Island Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary to the National Council was held at Trinity Church, Brooklyn, November 10. Bishop Stires preached and celebrated Holy Communion. In the chancel with him were the rector of the parish, the Rev. Jacob Probst, D. D.; the Secretary of the Diocese, the Rev. J. H. Fitzgerald; the Archdeacon of Brooklyn, the Ven. Charles G. Clark, and the Rev. A. W. E. Carrington. In the afternoon the speakers were Bishop Burleson, of South Dakota, and Mrs. Bayard Stewart, of the Philippines. The offering was toward the Auxiliary's quota of $7,000.

Anniversary of a G. F. S. Branch.

The G. F. S. of the Church of the Redeemer, Astoria, celebrated its thirty-fourth anniversary on Thursday evening, November 17. The occasion was made a reunion of old and present members. One of the charter members was present, together with a number of former members now living elsewhere, and one former rector of the parish. This branch of the G. F. S. has been unusually successful throughout its history, and has always been one of the most active and valuable organizations in the parish. The Rev. W. C. Charlton is rector. Miss Grace Carrington, Branch Secretary, was the recipient of a present from the members of the branch, in recognition of her long and devoted service.

The Church Mission of Help will hold its annual sale on December 1 at the Neighborhood Club, Brooklyn.

GEORGIA.

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop.

"Lesson Plans."

Not only is the Diocesan Department of Religious Education serving the Diocese of Georgia, but it is reaching out and giving assistance to other Dioceses in the Province of Sewanee through its "Lesson Plans" in loose leaf form, containing music, prayers and aids in teaching. There are seven copies of these books for use in parishes on request, and may be rented for $1.

Beginning in a small way, the headquarters of the department in Christ Church Parish House, Savannah, are being used also as a training school, which will later develop in a larger way as the plans grow. An offer was made to the various parishes for the education of workers in the field of religious education, and this is being accepted. Several young women are gaining practical experience in office work as well as instruction in teaching. The Church School of Christ Church is used as a laboratory.

The spirit of inter-parochialism is gaining greater force in Savannah through the attendance of teachers from the four parishes at the grade conferences held each month in nine courses of the Christian Nurture Series.

For three days the clergy of the Albany Archdeaconry of this Diocese met in St. John's Church, Bainbridge, and held services, Bible study, conferences and book reviews November 8-10. Visits were made to the schools and the jail, and one afternoon was devoted to Religious Education, the conference being conducted by Mrs. J. W. Griffeth, Executive Secretary of the Diocesan Department. This was followed by an hour for the young people led by Mrs. Griffeth and the Ven. James B. Lawrence, Archdeacon. This feature concluded with a story hour for the children of the town.

DALLAS.

Rt. Rev. H. T. Moore, D. D., Bishop.

St. Andrew's, Fort Worth (Rev. Edward Henry Eckel, D. D., rector): All Saints' Day was signalized this year, in addition to its customary features in this church, by the unveiling and dedication of a new memorial window, the gift of Mrs. Waller in memory of her husband, Captain John Fontaine Waller, for many years a vestryman and warden till shortly before his death in 1909. The subject of the window is "The Parables by the Sea", and Mrs. Waller has announced that she will soon put in the companion window next to it, the subject of which will be "The Sermon on the Mount". There will thus be in the north aisle, according to the scheme of subjects designed by the rector, a presentation of Christ as the Word of Life, while the corresponding spaces in the south aisle will set Him forth as the Lord of Life.

PITTSBURGH.

Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., Bishop.

"Stewardship."

At St. Stephen's Church, Wilkinsburg, five vestrymen and one licensed lay reader are giving talks from the chancel Sunday mornings and evenings from November 13-27. The general theme is "Stewardship", stressing the belief that as stewards of God Who is owner of all, we should give at least a tenth of our income to Him.

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA.

The Rt. Rev. J. M. Horner, D. D., Bishop

Salvation Army Has Service in Church.

By invitation of the rector, the Rev. Clarence Stuart McClellan, Jr., members of the Salvation Army in Western North Carolina took part in the morning service in Calvary Episcopal Church, near Asheville, on Sunday morning before Thanksgiving Day. Addresses were delivered by Captain A. C. Story and Envoy Edward Summers, Mrs. A. C. Story and Mrs. Summers, relative to the work of the Salvation Army. Before the addresses members of the Salvation Army in uniform rendered a program of old Salvation Army hymns in the chancel of the church. Salvation Army flags and insignia adorned the historic church. The rector preached a short sermon on "Common Sense Religion". A very large congregation attended and a good-sized offering was given the Salvation Army for their work.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland, D. D., Bishop.

Reading Railroad Night.

At St. Jude and Nativity Church, Philadelphia, on November 20, a service was held for all persons connected with the Reading Railroad. Every department of the railroad system, two railroad clubs and two Y. M. C. A. divisions agreed to back the rector, the Rev. John L. Saunders, in making this service a memorable occasion.

ALABAMA.

Rt. Rev. C. M. Beckwith, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. G. McDowell, D. D., Coadjutor.

Woman's Auxiliary.

The thirty-ninth annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of this Diocese was held October 18-20 at the Church of the Nativity, Huntsville, Ala., the Rev. Cary Gamble rector. The visitors were greeted by Mrs. M. M. Duncan, of the local branch, and response was made by Miss Martha Baird Feltus, of Birmingham. The opening address was by Bishop McDowell.

Officers for the coming term were elected as follows: President, Mrs. Albert S. Wilson, of Montgomery; Vice-President, Mrs. T. O. Melton, of Birmingham, Treasurer; Miss Marie Upton, of Greenville; Educational Secretary, Mrs. D. E. Wilson, of Woodward.

The meeting concluded with a pilgrimage to the "House of Happiness", an institutional work in the mountains of Northern Alabama.

The Bishop's League.

In the Birmingham District of this Diocese an association of laymen has been formed, to be known as the Bishop's League. It is planned to enroll 100 charter members, each contributing from $50 to $250 annually for the development of the Church in this rapidly growing, industrial section.

About one-half the above number recently met at the Church of the Advent, Birmingham, and organized. After the first 100 larger contributors are enrolled, a further call will be issued for members making pledges of smaller amounts annually.

While it is mainly a laymen's organization, the Rev. Charles Clingman, rector of the Advent, was elected secretary, and Bishop McDowell will be ex officio chairman of the Executive Committee of the League.

Among the first to benefit by the organization will be the congregation at Fairfield, a nearby town of 10,000, where it is hoped to purchase a suitable lot and begin building in the near future. Also St. Mark's School (colored, industrial) will be aided in moving from its present cramped quarters to a more commodious and attractive site in the suburbs.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C Thomson, D. D., Coadjutor.

Inspiring Mission.

November 2-13 the Rt. Rev. Paul Jones held a mission in Emmanuel Church, Phoebus, Rev. Arthur Machen Lewis, rector.

There were services every night and special services for men and for women and for children in the afternoons.

November 8 Bishop Jones met the ministers of the Peninsula in a conference. The interest steadily grew until the closing night, when the church was filled to its capacity.

Our people all testify to the great help they received from the mission.

CONNECTICUT.

Rt. Rev. John C. White, D. D., Bishop.

The 143d Anniversary of the Consecration of Bishop Seabury.

Many people gathered at Woodbury, Conn., on November 14 to greet and hear Rt. Rev. F. L. Deane, Bishop of Aberdeen, and Dr. Erskine Hill, Provost of the Cathedral.

In the long procession entering St. Paul's Church were about thirty-five clergymen followed by the guests from overseas and Bishops Brewster and Acheson. Scores of people stood during the service and several hundred, unable to gain entrance, listened to the hymns until Bishop Deane, leaving the church, spoke from the porch to the great throng. The opening hymn, "To Satisfy and Cheer Our Souls", was the same hymn that was sung at Bishop Seabury's consecration 143 years ago this day in Scotland. The psalm used in the service was the same that was sung at the first celebration of the Holy Communion by the settlers at Jamestown, Va., in 1607.

Bishop Acheson read the prayers and psalm. Bishop Brewster then introduced the guests of the day. Provost Hill in response made a gracious address on the close relationship of the Church in Scotland to the Church in America. Then the Bishop of Aberdeen recounted the zealous exploit of Samuel Seabury in braving many perils Collect for the First Sunday in Advent.

Almighty God, give us grace that we may cast away the works of darkness, and put upon us the armour of light, now in the time of this mortal visit, in which Thy Son Jesus Christ came to visit us in great humility that in the last day, when He shall come again in His glorious Majesty to judge both the quick and the dead, we may arise to the life immortal, through Him Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, now and ever. Amen.

Collect for St. Andrew's Day.

Almighty God, Who didst give such grace unto Thy holy Apostle St. Andrew, that he readily obeyed the calling of Thy Son Jesus Christ and followed Him without delay; grant unto us all, that we being called by Thy Holy Word, may forthwith give up ourselves obediently to fulfil Thy Holy Commandments; through the same Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Yet There Is Room.

Day is declining, and the sun is low;
The shadows lengthen, light makes haste to go.
The bridal hall is filling for the feast—
Pass in, pass in! and be the Bridegroom's guest.

It fills, it fills, that hall of jubilee;
Make haste, make haste; 'tis not too full for thee.
Pass in, pass in! the banquet is for thee;
That cup of everlasting love is free.

All heaven is there, all joy! Go in, go in;
The angels beckon thee the prize to win.
Louder and sweeter sounds the loving call;
Come, linger, come; enter this festal hall.

Christ's Advent Call to Awake.

The great crises of history, and the great revolutions or revelations in human knowledge, have been most strangely impotent to move the mass of mankind out of their familiar ruts. For instance, the city of Rome, owing mainly to obvious geographical advantages, was for many centuries mistress of the Mediterranean basin, which then almost comprised the civilized world; and so strong is the force of habit that to this day many millions of Christians are convinced that in the counsels of God there must always be a universal Church with its seat of government on the banks of the Tiber. Again, modern astronomy has long ago shattered the old religious geography of the universe; but old habits of thought are too strong for new knowledge. The world of many Christians is still a building in three stories. More recently, the discovery of evolution has left nothing in politics, theology, or morals, quite where it was before. The fact of our real kinship with all that lives and moves in the world does not detract one atom from the glory and dignity of the humanity which God created after His Own image, and which His Son deigned to take upon Him for our sakes; but it does add a new lustre, a new sacredness, to the rest of creation and to the laws which it obeys. It does give a new force to that wonderful chapter of Romans in which St. Paul declares his hope that the creation will be delivered from the bondage of corruption; it does help us to understand the Pauline and Johannine doctrine that in the Son of God, the Word, all things subsist. It certainly involves a new responsibility in our dealings with the lower animals, our poor relations. But these truths will take centuries to soak into the popular mind.

The Gospel of Christ was a greater revolution than any of these discoveries. Think what it must have been to the first Disciples of Jesus to find that the Kingdom to which they were invited was not of this world. Think of the terrible wrench in giving up those patriotic dreams which had comforted the Jews through centuries of exile, persecution, and servitude. Think of the shock at being bidden to welcome to the society of the redeemed the uncircumcised Philistine, the heretical Samaritan, the barbarian and the Scythian. And what rare greatness there was in St. Paul, that he realized nearly all that it meant! The spiritual Israel instead of the nation; the indwelling Spirit of Christ instead of the priests and temple; the entirely new standard of values—the loving, unselfish heart, which, in having nothing possesses all things, instead of the worldly prosperity which in the Old Testament is the sign of God's favor—the law of giving sacrifice, of gain through pain, of life through death—the sublime trials of faith, hope, love, and love, joy, peace—all these things, in which the originality and far-reaching import of the Gospel mainly consists, were seized and realized by St. Paul as they have been by few since. He saw at once what it must mean for him personally. The whole course of his life was changed. Those things which before were gain to him now counted but refuse that he might "win Christ". The Incarnation had altered everything, and it surprised him that others did not see that it had altered everything. There must be a veil on their hearts; they must be asleep and dreaming. It is strange to him that people can go on living as if the light of the Glory of God had not shone upon them in the face of Jesus Christ. "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall shine upon thee."

What would St. Paul say to us today, if he were preaching in this greatest of the Churches dedicated in his name? Is the world a different place to you and me because Christ has lived in it? Is our hope in Christ the decisive factor in the principles that we live by, in the things that we desire for ourselves and our children? We think we believe, I know; but is our faith awake or is it lying bedridden in some dormitory of our soul? Is it part of us at all, or furniture stacked in a lumber-room?

Let it be our special business this Advent to make our religion alive and wideawake. To begin with, let us make sure what we really believe. Some teachers would have us regard the Creed as a "deposit", something to be kept safe and handed back intact. "Lord, here is Thy pound, which I have kept wrapped up in a napkin. Lo, here Thou hast what is Thine." But surely, my brethren, what matters is how deeply we believe, not how much we accept. It is better to believe in one Article than to assent to Thirty-nine. The rudimentary creeds in the New Testament are theologically very imperfect, but those who held them were willing to die for them.

Secondly, we need to quicken our feeling of the truth of our religion. We must practice "recollection", with short prayers and acts of uplifting the mind to God, many times during the day. If we give about sixteen hours a day to this world, and about five sleepy minutes to the other, it is no wonder if God and Heaven seem rather shadowy things to us.

And, of course, we must act as persons who are awake. Our consciousness of the great revelation of the Gospel must show itself in the consecration of our whole life, "whether we eat or drink or whatsoever we do". It must, above all things, deepen our love to God and our neighbor. "If ye know these things," said our Lord, "happy are ye if ye do them." "He that saith, I know God, and keepeth not His commandments, is a liar!" says St. John, bluntly.

So, by God's grace, the call to awake out of sleep may not be lost upon us. So our eyes may be opened to see God and do His will. And so a life of ever-increasing alertness and watchfulness may be the prelude of that clearer vision when, after the sleep of death, we shall wake up after God's likeness and shall be satisfied with it.—Dean Inge.

How to Help.

There is not a great deal that any of us can do for our Church. Sometimes what we can do seems so little that it is not worth doing. That is a mistake, but a very common mistake. The Church loses thousands of dollars in gifts each year because so many people will not give at all unless they can give in large amounts. God asks us to give in proportion to our means and not in proportion to our desires, our vanity, or our neighbors. He asks us to give lovingly and willingly what we can, whether large or small in amount.

There are many little things we can do for the Church. A friendly invitation to some one who never goes to Church may make more difference in the history of the world than the munificent gift of a millionaire. God uses the little things and the weak things to confound the great. He is always demonstrating that His Grace is sufficient for the tasks. He asks us to dertake. So why be afraid of the job that seems big or why be ashamed to do the thing that seems so insignificant as to be useless? There is something worth while to do for the Church. Find your work and do it with all your might, as old Thomas Carlisle said.

But besides this business of helping through work there is another and even more important way to help. No human activity or effort, no human skill or wisdom, no organization or enthusiasm can take the place of prayer. If we do not pray, if we do not pray alone and together, before the altar and behind closed doors, we shall always lag and faint and at least partially fail. We must pray and pray earnestly, regularly, offering ourselves to God if we are to find our fullest usefulness and do our most effective work for Christ and His Church.—Rev. Thomas Casady (Bishop-elect of Oklahoma).

For the Southern Churchman

Before He Comes.

F. B. Stone.

We feel, Thee, Master, striving
To find a voice through men,
To tell of Thy soon coming
From heav'n to earth again.

A voice like John the Baptist's,
To cry on mount and plain,
"Awake, repent, ye nations,
He comes, He comes again"!

The portents are beginning,
Convulsing land and sea,
All nations feel impending
The mighty things to be.

"That Day" is fast approaching,
No power can stay its speed;
O, give the world, ye people,
Christ's Gospel in its need.

Send forth the Gospel quickly,
Ere stewardship shall cease,
And all the powers of darkness
Their forces shall release.

O, we whom Christ has trusted,
The Word of Life to spread,
How can we at His coming
Then face the unsaved, dead?

Prepare the way for Jesus,
All ye who know new-birth;
May Christ of all the nations
Find faith upon the earth.

Notes From Porto Rico.

By the Rt. Rev. Charles B. Colmore, D. D., Bishop of Porto Rico.

(Memory and a diligent reading of Church papers cannot recall a better statement, well rounded, concise but very informing, from a missionary bishop outlining his field, than this which Bishop Colmore wrote for the Long Island Church Militant.)

In any country it is necessary to count upon the native element for a successful prosecution of the Church's work. As long as any mission depends entirely upon foreigners there can be no real continuity to the work. In Porto Rico this principle has been taken into account and we have been working for many years toward the building up of a native ministry, both of men and women.

Three young Porto Ricans have recently been ordained to the priesthood. I think I am not exaggerating at all when I say that these young men are as well prepared and as efficient priests as we ever get from our own seminaries in the States. I cannot say too much of them, and we feel that we are justly proud of the work they are doing. Two of them were trained entirely in Porto Rico; the other had two years' instruction at the Du Bose School in Tennessee. By placing these men in the ministry it has been possible already to dispense with the services of one American priest, the young man who is taking his place being able to carry on the work of that mission most satisfactorily.

Besides the three men mentioned we have accepted and ordained five other native men who had been trained on the ground by Bishop Ferrando. One of these men is working as assistant to the rector of Holy Trinity Church, in Ponce, and the other four are ministering among their own people in the mountains in and around Quebrada Limon, which was the work built up by Bishop Ferrando before his entrance into the Episcopal Church.

This makes a total of eight native priests in Porto Rico, without counting the Suffragan Bishop. These men have a tremendous advantage over American missionaries in reaching their own people. They know the language and customs of the people; they know what in our Church will appeal; and they know how to express it. Besides this, they are already accustomed to the climate and food and all other conditions which it is necessary to meet. In other words, they are at home and are not apt to be broken down by conditions which are entirely new and foreign to American missionaries. This insures greater continuity to the Church's work. As long as we were dependent entirely upon American missionaries we found in many cases that when, after one had spent a few years in the field, for one of many reasons, it was necessary for him to return home, all the experience he had gained was lost and we had to begin over again with a new missionary.

We have four American priests, most of whom have been tried and found most satisfactory, and I hope they will remain for many years to come. We shall for a long time need Americans for oversight, but we are going ahead with our native men and hope to greatly increase our number. Four boys in the high school at the present time have signified their intention of studying for the Sacred Ministry and should soon be admitted as postulants.

As a link in this chain leading to the native ministry we have three parochial schools and the expectation of establishing at least one other. Bringing up the children through the grammar grades, we can get an idea of their characters so as to choose the boys and girls who will be most suitable for the Church's work. As these children graduate from the grammar grades of our own schools, or have been observed in other missions while attending the public schools, we choose the girls who seem most promising, taking some for the Training School for Nurses at St. Luke's Hospital, Ponce, and bringing others to St. Catherine's Training School in San Juan.

St. Catherine's is for the training of woman workers in the mission field. They are able to attend the Central High School in San Juan while they are getting their training under Miss Robinson for the Church's work. After graduation from the high school they will specialize in the line for which they are most adapted, whether for teaching, parish visiting or social service work.

These girls, like the native priests, will be already prepared for the conditions under which they will have to work and will insure the continuity of the women's work. St. Catherine's Training School property has only this year (1926) been purchased for the Church. It contains area enough to provide for a church building, parish house, rectory and training school, which we hope to have in the future. At the present time there is a mortgage of some $9,000 on the property. Besides the features of the work thus far spoken of, our girls are being trained in industrial work at Mayaguez. We have there a large shop in which the children are taught needle work, space is provided for them to work in, all materials are furnished for them, good wages paid for their work and the product is marketed in the States. All profit is used for the benefit of mission work in Porto Rico. This industrial work has already in the past bought and paid for its own home, has provided for a visiting nurse and has helped in the construction of country chapels for the native people.

The farm of Quebrada Limon is another most interesting feature of the native work. Here Mr. Edmunds, of New York, is our agricultural missionary, seeking to instruct the native people in agriculture, care of animals and poultry, etc. He is trying, by use of the facilities which are available for all the natives, to show them how to increase their crops and make better use of their land. This mission is in the midst of a population of some 15,000 people and is the only religious work being done among them. There is an immediate opportunity for the extension of the Church's work in almost every line: evangelistic, secular education, medical work, social service, agricultural and industrial training. If we are to take advantage of the opportunities which God has placed in our hands we must increase our mission staff, and this increase should be among the native people.

The whole island of Porto Rico is over-populated. We have some three hundred and twenty people to the square mile. The people are consequently poor. The need is for service. Let the Church build up a Christian service conducted largely by the native people, whether priests or lay workers. We believe that in this way we shall help most in teaching the people to live, and shall make God's Kingdom a reality among them.

Life Goes Not Out, But On.

The life of a Loved One does not end. It simply goes on. Its work is done here, only to take up its work in the "other room". We lived before and we live after here. We are not summer flies that live but for a day. Nature teaches us this. The rotation of the trees in the woods; the succession of the seasons; the leaf that falls in the autumn turns into nurture for the new leaf of the spring. There is no end. It becomes easier to believe this when the other shore begins to be peopled by our loved ones. We can never feel for others until we have felt ourselves; we know not how to extend sympathy until it has been meted out to us. Life looks differently after the light of a life dear to us has gone on. But on, not out, it has gone; and surely, if sometimes slowly, that truth comes home to us and enters our lives. The physical presence may be denied us, but the spiritual takes its place, strengthening, heartening, reviving and uplifting. Those who leave us are never far off; they are real and near to us. And oftimes when the heart is saddest, the load heaviest, and the trial greatest, it is they who stretch out their hands to us and give us fresh courage that we wonder whence it came. It is only that with our eyes we can see not and with our ears we can hear not. One only needs to lose a good mother to know and learn this truth; to learn it so deeply and truly that no ism or cult or creed can shake that belief. It is then that clarity of vision comes; when the eye sees clearly and the mind and heart and soul unite in but one fixed truth—that we go on. The western gates close only to let the eastern gates open.

Doubt as well as faith has its problems. If the miracle of Christ's resurrection be rejected, the change that came over the spirit of the disciples, the rapid rise of Christianity, and its marvelous achievements through nineteen centuries, must be accounted for. How is this to be done?—Selected.

The Power of Love.

Martha Shepard Lippincott.

With love the guiding star of life,
What heights will man attain?
There is no other power that
Can such rich blessings gain;
Have it the motive of your thoughts,
And every deed in life,
Then you will banish from your hearts
All thoughts of needless strife;;

And life will seem a blissful dream,
So full of happiness;
While every thought and deed of yours,
Some other soul will bless;
For love will make the world so bright
That sorrows cannot stay,
Love's sunshine will keep crowding them
And driving them away.

The Books That Ran Home.

Missionaries have to learn to do all sorts of things. There are no stores around the corner in the African jungle.

Many years ago a missionary was trying to teach some of the African boys and girls to read. She had no blackboard, no tablets, no pencils. With a sharp stick she made letters and figures in the red earth. School books written on the ground do not last long. Sometimes the rain came and washed the lesson away. Sometimes people walked over it. The missionary was dreadfully discouraged. Then, too, there were only a few children who could see her book on the ground. She wanted books that could be sent to other villages.

"What are we to do about it?" she said to the other missionary.

Now the other missionary was a man, and he was very strong. "If I knew where a printing press could be found, I'd go right out and get it for you," he said.

But both of them knew there was no printing press in that part of Africa. He took from his pocket his sharp knife and looked at it.

"I'll tell you what I'll do, I'll make a printing press."

The teacher laughed. "Make a printing press with a pocketknife! Who ever heard of such a thing!"

But the man missionary already had a good, smooth board in his hand and he began to whittle away with all of his might. He tried one way to whittle a letter and when that wouldn't work, he tried another way, and then, a half dozen other ways, until at last he had a wooden type that would print the letter A. After that it was easy to make all the other letters.

But his troubles weren't over. Now that he had a printing press where was he to find the ink?

When the next boat came in there was some printer's ink in it, but there were no pads, and printer's ink is so thick it has to have pads and rolls. He found two empty tin cans and stuffed them full and running over with cotton.

"Now if you'll give me one of your old shoes," he announced, "I'll show you how to make the latest thing to be had in printing pads."

The soft leather was ripped from the top of the shoe and tied over the cotton, which stuck out from the ends of the two cans. The inventor rubbed the soft pads together in great glee. Then he dabbed some of the ink on them and kept on rubbing them together until the ink was thin enough for printing. He pressed the wooden type down on the pads and then he pressed the type on a piece of paper. There the letter A was on the paper! What should he print for the first words of his printing press?

One by one he made the letters "Babe watu wa njajini", which means "Our Father Which Art in Heaven".

One day a mission school boy was watching the wonderful printing press make the letters on white cloth. He pressed one of them on his body and the letter was printed on his smooth, brown skin. Then he added another letter and another until there it was "Babe watu wa njajini". When the other children saw it they wanted the printing press to give them some printing they could carry around with them, too, so the letters of the alphabet, or some words from a Bible verse were printed on their bodies. The boys and girls themselves were the first school books in that part of Africa, and they ran home to show the wonderful printing. Fathers and mothers and brothers and sisters began to learn to read from these living books. It wasn't very long before there were real books with pages of alphabets, and stories to read, but many people remembered the days when the first printing press was whittled out of wood and when the boys and girls were the books that ran home.—Everyland.

Why Vartan Would Not Change His Name.

Minna McEuen Meyer.

There is room on Canada's great farm for boys who will become good farmers, so when the World War left many orphans in the Near East, instead of just sending contributions for their support in far-away lands, as we in the United States have done, the Canadians also arranged to bring over a hundred Armenian orphan boys to grow up on Canada's farms.

When the boys landed they were first placed in an orphanage not far from Toronto. One day a lady came to see them. She was especially attracted by one lad about ten years old.

"What is this boy's name?" she asked the Director.

"It is Vartan," he replied.

"If you will change his name to James, I will support him and send him to school," said the lady.

The next day after the chapel service the Director spoke to the small boy. "Vartan, I want to change your name to James. A good lady who is interested in you says she would like to take care of you and send you to school, but she would like you to bear the name of James."

Little Vartan looked up at the Director's face, and then down at the floor, but he did not answer.

"Did you understand me?" asked the Director. "Don't you think James is a fine name?"

Tears came to Vartan's eyes. He could not speak, but with a look that was an appeal for help, he turned toward his friend, an older boy, who sat near. The older stood up.

"Please, sir," he said. "When Vartan was a tiny baby his mother took him to the church and, as the minister sprinkled water on his head, she gave him the name, 'Vartan'. That name is all he has, sir, that was loved by his mother."

"All right, my boy," answered the Director, his voice trembling a little, and turning to the whole group, he added, "You may go now."

When the lady came again to the orphanage the Director told her that Vartan did not wish to change his name and explained the reason.

"Well, I'll do more than pay for that boy's support," she declared, when she heard the story. "I am going to adopt him as my own son, but his name shall remain Vartan."

When Dorothy Was Sure.

It was Dorothy's birthday. She was five years old. She loved surprises. Out in the dining room stood her doll carriage. It was empty. Once a lovely doll had been in it.

One morning Dorothy took this pretty doll out for a ride. She took the doll carriage over the wooden bridge. Underneath the bridge was deep water. A loose board lay in the path.

Bump! went the wheels of the doll carriage. Out of the carriage tumbled the doll. Over the edge of the wooden bridge it fell. Down into the water.

It could not swim. Dorothy couldn't either.

"Oh! if I could only swim," thought Dorothy. "Maybe I could have saved dolly. The water is not very deep. Next time when daddy tries to teach me to swim I won't be afraid. I'll try hard to learn."

Dorothy felt lonesome. She missed her doll. She wished that she had another one.

Something happened.

It was Dorothy's birthday. She went into the dining room. Mother had said to her "Dorothy, please look for mother's other glove. I've lost one somewhere." Dorothy hurried to obey her mother.

Then came the surprise.

Dorothy looked into the doll carriage. In it was a beautiful new doll. She lifted it up. It said "mama". She laid it gently down again. It closed its pretty eyes. It went to sleep.

Dorothy's mother came into the room. She said to Dorothy, "Stand your new doll upon her feet. Now take hold of both hands."

"Look, mother, she can walk, too," said Dorothy. "Isn't she a wonderful doll? I'm so happy because she is mine."

The new doll's hair was a pretty golden yellow. It was curly, too. The doll had bright blue eyes. Just the color of Dorothy's. Its dress was peach color. The dress was very pretty. The two little white petticoats had lace on the edges. On its cute feet were pink stockings and slippers.

"She is very beautiful. I shall name her Princess," said Dorothy.

It was two weeks after Dorothy's birthday. Dorothy's mother was going visiting. She took Dorothy with her. They visited the Children's Home. Many little children lived in this big building called a home.

Dorothy took Princess with her to visit the Children's Home. When they got inside the big hall they heard a child crying. She had just come to live at the Home. She felt strange.

Over to the little new child Dorothy hurried. She put Princess in her arms. "You will love to hold her," said Dorothy. A big tear glistened on the little new child's round, little cheek. She hugged Princess to her loving little heart.

Dorothy's mother was soon ready to go home. She called Dorothy. "Why, where is Princess?" mother asked.

"In the little new girl's arms," said Dorothy.

Dorothy remembered why the little new child had been crying. It was because she was lonesome. She was contented now. A happy smile was on her lips.

Mother smiled, too. Then—she said to Dorothy, "Are you sure that you can let the little new child keep Princess"?

Dorothy looked at her beautiful Princess. She loved her. She looked at the happy little child hugging Princess. Then she said slowly and thoughtfully, "Yes, mother, I am sure".

An Unexpected Holiday.

Edwin Baxter lived in Greenwood, a town in the southern part of the United States. He had never seen any snow for it was seldom cold enough to snow in Greenwood.

The older people told of snow that they had seen years ago. But during Edwin's six years there had never been as much as one snowflake in this part of the country.

One day the newspapers reported that very cold weather was coming. The boys hurried home from school, for the wind was already cold and biting.

"It's going to snow," said Jack Spaulding, "and I'm going to get out my sled."

"Your sled!" cried all the other boys. "Have you a sled?"

"Of course I have; haven't you?" asked Jack in surprise. "Where I used to live in Boston all the boys had sleds."

The Spaulding back yard was a busy place that afternoon. Every boy of the neighborhood was there, eager to see Jack's sled. How they polished the red wood and ran their hands along the cold runners to see how sharp they were. The sled was a beauty! At dusk Edwin went home for his supper. But he was so excited he could hardly eat. All through the evening he kept shading his eyes and looking out the window. Just before going to bed he looked for the last time, but there was no sign of snow. He began to be discouraged.

But during the night little white snowflakes began to collect in the corners of the hedge where the wind blew them. They came faster and spread out over the grass. All night long they fell, until by morning, when Edwin looked out, the snow was a foot deep and every branch and twig was outlined in white.

But Edwin was not as pleased as he expected to be. "School!" he complained to himself. "To have to go to school on a day like this!"

After breakfast he helped his father shovel the sidewalk. The snow was so light it was just like shoveling feathers. This was not work at all, but play. So they went right along and cleared the walk next door.

"I'll finish this now," said father. "You'd better get your books and run along to school."

But Edwin kept on shoveling. He worked away silently for a few minutes. Then he heard the biggest commotion. It sounded like a band of Indians coming down the street, whooping and calling.

"No school today!" they shouted. "It's a holiday—no school!"

The boys soon collected in the commons, where they rolled huge snowballs and built a fort. Jack had his sled and they took turns coasting down the hill as far as the mill.

Edwin liked the coasting best of all. But there were so many boys that his turn to ride came only twice during the whole morning.

When the twelve o'clock whistle blew Edwin started home for dinner. Just as he reached his own house he saw a man coasting in the middle of the street. The man came to a stop right in front of him—it was his father on a brand-new sled!

"That's the quickest time I ever made coming from the office. I've coasted all the way from High Street," he said to the surprised boy. "Well, how do you like your new sled?"

Edwin was more pleased than he could say. He forgot about his dinner for a long time and coasted until he was hungry.

After dinner the boys were all out on the hill again. Coasting was more popular than ever, because now there were three sleds. Jack was there with his and Harry Tompson had a new one almost like Edwin's. Each boy's turn to ride came very often now.

It was almost dark when Edwin had his last ride on his new sled.

"See you tomorrow!" the boys called as they parted.

But the next morning the sun came out bright and warm and by eight o'clock there was not a sign of snow except in the corners of the hedge.—Exchange.

A Christmas Thought.

Christmas, the blessed season, is approaching, when our Lord came down to dwell among men for a brief time, to show to all who will heed what the spirit of love and thought for others may accomplish.

Will you not think of the lepers and what joy it brings to them to be remembered by the simple gifts bestowed on each one? And will you not give to these, our Lord's most unfortunate children, in memory of some loved one in Paradise,

All money gratefully acknowledged by MISS E. P. MERIWETHER,
President and Treasurer.

Deaths

MRS. MARIA BROOKE ARMAT.

Entered into life eternal on November 2, 1927, at her home in Washington, D. C., in the eighty-ninth year of her age, MARIA BROOKE ARMAT, widow of Christopher Armat and daughter of Samuel Selden Brooke and Angelina Edrington, of Millvale, Brooke Station, Stafford county, Va.

Funeral services were held at St. Thomas' Church, Washington, D. C., on November 4th. Interment on same day in Fredericksburg, Va.

She is survived by one daughter, Angie Brooke Armat, and five sons, Thomas, Christopher, Selden Brooke, and John Hunter Armat, of Washington, D. C.

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

ALEXANDER WELLINGTON WALLACE.

Died at his residence in Fredericksburg, Va., October 23, 1927, ALEXANDER WELLINGTON WALLACE.

Judge Wallace was born in Fredericksburg, August 20, 1843. In 1860 he entered the University of Virginia, intending to study law. In the spring of 1861 he withdrew to enlist in Company C, Thirtieth Virginia Regiment, Pickett's Division, with which he served until the surrender at Appomattox.

After his return from the army he continued the study of law in the office of Judge R. T. Barton, of Fredericksburg, supporting himself while studying by tutoring pupils preparing to enter college.

In 1866 he was admitted to the Bar and began to practice in Fredericksburg. From 1875 to 1877 he was a representative of his district in the General Assembly, and in 1889 he was elected Judge of the Corporation Court of Fredericksburg. This position he held until 1903, when he resigned, believing that he was ineligible to hold this office and serve as a member of the Board of Visitors of the University of Virginia, to which he had been appointed.

During his later years Judge Wallace devoted most of his time to the affairs of the National Bank of Fredericksburg, of which he was for many years president, but he preserved his interest in his profession and in 1922 was elected President of the Virginia Bar Association.

From his infancy Judge Wallace was a devoted member of St. George's Church, Fredericksburg, and for many years vestryman and senior warden. When age compelled him to resign his duties he was elected warden emeritus. Judge Wallace represented his parish at many of the annual meetings of the Councils of the Diocese and in 1904 was one of the lay delegates of the Diocese to the General Convention.

In 1883 he married Miss Victoria Stevens, of Philadelphia, who survives him. No children were born of the marriage, but he is survived by many nieces and nephews.

FREDERICK T. DATSON, PRIEST.

An Appreciation.

The REV. FREDERICK T. DATSON, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Wichita Falls, Texas, entered into eternal rest on Wednesday, November 9, 1927.

We, the clergy of the Diocese of Dallas, desire to place on record, together with our sense of bereavement and our profound sympathy with the sorrowing family, our deep and sincere appreciation of the personal character and the intellectual, pastoral and administrative ability of our late associate and fellow-priest.

Coming to this Diocese of Dallas early in 1914 as rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Wichita Falls, he served his parish, community and Diocese with conspicuous efficiency up to within a few months of his decease. For about a year and a half, 1918-19, he served as rector of Trinity Parish, Fort Worth. At the time of his lamented death, at the age of fifty-three years, he was the third priest of the Diocese in order of canonical connection.

By reason of his widely exercised civic and religious activity in Wichita Falls in furtherance of educational, philanthropic and Christian enterprises, he had come to be recognized as one of the city's foremost citizens, known, honored and loved by all classes of people. This fact was impressively indicated in local newspaper accounts of his death, and was strikingly manifested, at the time of his burial, by the numerous representatives from various civic bodies who paid their sorrowful tribute to his memory.

The extensive and valuable parish property in the heart of the city, embracing a new church and parish house, stand as a lasting monument to his energy and success as an executive and administrator.

The Diocese of Dallas has lost by his demise one of its most capable, conscientious and useful clergy, whose wider interest and service have been of great benefit to the Diocese, and have been recognized by the bestowal of the highest honors that were within its gift.

"Lord, all-pitying Jesus blest, Grant him Thine eternal rest."

Signed for the clergy:
HIRAM J. ELLIS,
EDWARD HENRY ECKEL,
CHAUNCEY E. SNOWDEN, Committee.

WILLIAM WINDER LAIRD.

The funeral of WILLIAM WINDER LAIRD, age forty-nine, senior member of the brokerage house of Laird, Bissell and Meads, and nationally known banker, who died at Georgetown, S. C., on Saturday afternoon, November 19, took place November 21 at 2:30 o'clock with services in Christ P. E. Church Christiana Hundred, Del.

Mr. Laird went to Georgetown with his brother, Irenee duPont, Eugene E. duPont, and several others a week ago Saturday, on a hunting trip. There were at the Kinloch Club at Georgetown, when Mr. Laird, who was suffering with a cold when the party left this city, developed pneumonia. His condition became worse and Mrs. Laird was sent for, reaching there early Friday. Death occurred on Saturday afternoon.

Born in Maryland.

Mr. Laird was born at Brookville, Md., on January 4, 1878, and was the son of William H. Laird and Rosa Packard Laird. On his mother's side he descended from the Lees of Virginia, and on his father's side from the Goldsboroughs of Maryland. Though born in Maryland, he was always looked upon as a Delawarean, because he was interested in everything for the benefit of his adopted state. He was educated in the Episcopal High School at Alexandria, Va., and, after graduating from that institution, tutored for two years in Virginia.

In 1901, Mr. Laird came to Wilmington and was connected with the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York, at its Wilmington office. In 1903, when the Wilmington Trust Company was formed, he became connected with that institution and was its first teller. He rapidly advanced in this bank until he became Vice-President.

Counsel Eagerly Sought.

His advice and counsel were sought by numerous concerns and he continued active in the financial world until his death. He was a director of the Wilmington Trust Company, the Bank of North America and Trust Company, of Philadelphia; the Charles Warner Company, of Wilmington; the Diamond Ice and Coal Company, the Seaboard Bond and Mortgage Company and the Lumberman's Insurance Company, of Philadelphia.

In civic life he was interested in the Service Citizens of Delaware and the Delaware Citizens' Association, which succeeded that body. He was a trustee of Tower Hill and the Alexis I. duPont Schools. During the war he was interested in the housing company which aided the government in building houses for workers in this city.

Mr. Laird was a grandson of the Rev. Joseph Packard, dean of the Theological Seminary of Virginia, for a number of years. His uncle, Philip T. Laird, was at one time speaker of the Virginia House of Representatives.

In 1904, Mr. Laird married Miss Mary A. Berlin duPont, a sister of Pierre S., Irenee and Lammot duPont. His wife and five children survive him. He is also survived by two brothers and five sisters. The brothers are Philip D. Laird, of New Castle, and Walter J. Laird, of Wilmington, and the sisters are: Mrs. Wilhelmina L. Stabler, of Marshallton; Mrs. Anna LeBell, of Alexandria, Va.; Mrs. Charlotte Okie, of Berwyn, Pa.; Miss Mattie P. Laird and Mrs. Mary Laird Tucker, both of Virginia.

Winder Laird fought the good fight, and finished his course and kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up a crown of righteousness which God has prepared for those who love Him.

to secure for his beloved Church the Episcopal order. He said it might seem ungracious to come here to ask for money to build a church in Scotland, but the conditions in Scotland have become such through the losses in the great war, the dismantling of great castles, loss of fortunes and impoverishment of the plain people, that he felt constrained to appeal to the generosity of the Church. The offering amounted to $3,300.

After the service the congregation and visitors were shown over the historic Glebe House Mansion. The Bishop of Aberdeen made a prayer in the room where John Rutgers Marshall and his nine associates chose Seabury for their Bishop. The visitors were shown Marshall's hiding place where he fled from religious persecution, a pit behind a secret door in the hall closet, and the many valuable relics of that early day.

LEXINGTON.

Rt. Rev. L. W. Burton. D. D., Bishop.

Woman's Auxiliary.

Miss Margaret Weed, of Jacksonville, Fla., Provincial Secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary, and the Rev. G. C. Dunlop, of Cincinnati, Ohio, were the principal speakers at the regional meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary held in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Lexington, on November 11.

The Rev. J. D. Gibson, rector of Trinity Church, Covington, having contracted a very deep-seated cold, has been advised by his vestry to take a few weeks' rest in Florida.

Bishop Burton took the services for Mr. Gibson on November 13 and also on November 20.

Anniversary.

Christ Church, Cuba, N. Y., marked the seventy-fifth anniversary of the organization of the parish at All Saints tide with an eight days' Preaching Missions conducted by the Rev. Walter E. Bentley, of Port Washington, N. Y. Mr. Bentley is a mission preacher of wide experience, and the mission has aroused much interest in the parish. The anniversary was brought to a close on the Sunday after the mission with a Corporate Communion of the parish, at which Bishop Ferris was celebrant.

Memorial.

During the summer St. Paul's Cathedral, Buffalo, received from the estate of the late Dr. Samuel D. Flagg, of Minneapolis, Minn., whose boyhood home was Buffalo and whose father was one of the prominent and active members of St. Paul's in its earlier days, a legacy of $1,000 for the Endowment Fund. Since then his widow has expressed her desire to place a memorial window in St. Paul's in memory of her husband and his father.

DOMINUS ILLUMINATIO MEA 1835

Vol. 92. RICHMOND, VA., DECEMBER 3, 1927. No. 49.

"The word of God, which liveth and abideth forever"
1 PETER 1:23

THE BIBLE

It is the one book in the World that appeals to the heart of the world. It is like the tree of life; and the leaves of this tree are for the healing of the nations. It is the pure river of water of life, for it comes out of the Throne of God, and of the Lamb; and everything shall live whither the river cometh.

It is the transformer and regenerator of the hearts of men, the lives of communities, the morals of races, the ideals of countries and the destinies of nations.

The Bible, if not the oldest book, is at least one of the oldest books in the World, and yet it never can be treated as a venerable relic of antiquity. It refuses to be superannuated. It is not dead, and it cannot be buried. It is invested with the mystic potency of ever-increasing life. It is zoic and energetic, as Paul said (Hebrews 4:12), vital with supernatural vitality, and vitalizing with mysterious potencies the lives of innumerable millions, and the reading and thinking of the most progressive nations in the world.

"THE DUTY OF CHRISTIANS, IS TO BRING THE BIBLE TO ALL MEN," said Bishop Wescott.—Dr. Dyson Xague, in "China's Millions."

When my son visited me after coming to this Parish he discovered that in the lapse of thirty years without a Rector the Communicant list had dwindled to one active member. Shortly afterwards in visiting in old Vawter's Parish he came across some old records and wrote me.

"Dear Father:

I see that in 1826 Josiah Ellis, as Delegate from St. Luke's Pedlar reported that they had one member and hoped to get more that year. I am glad to see you are holding your own."

Well, I am, and a little more, membership has increased 1500 per cent! Can you beat it!

Help us to continue the work by helping with Parish House, please.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH OF CHRIST

Text—(Isaiah 7:14) "The Lord Himself shall give you a sign; behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel."

What is the meaning of the unusual attention that is now being given to the Virgin Birth of Christ? It has recently been the subject of much discussion, for example, Soltau in his book on the Birth of Jesus Christ says: "It is a sin against the Holy Ghost to ask belief in the Virgin Birth." Dr. R. J. Campbell, in his book on "New Theology", says: "The simple and natural conclusion is that Jesus was the child of Joseph and Mary, and had an uneventful childhood. Truly the Evangelists who introduced this story into their Gospels have much to answer for." What an unjustifiable statement for any religious leader to make about the inspired writers of the Word.

There must be some reason for these attacks on the Virgin Birth because those who take issue with Christ or some written account of His earthly life in Scripture usually concentrate on what are regarded as strategic positions.

The Virgin Birth stands for the basic and vital principles of Supernaturalism. The main issue today is as to the proper recognition of God and the effort to explain everything in religion by means of rational and human elements. In opposition to this, the New Testament begins with a Divine Miracle in the Birth of the founder of Christianity. God evidently intended to show that the method of redemption He was about to inagurate was divine in its source, character and power.

Why It is Assailed.

The opposition to the Virgin Birth is in reality opposition to the miraculous. The Virgin Birth has always been an offence to Rationalism. That is why it is being assailed. Dr. James Orr, of Glasgow, a scholar of recognized standing in his book on The Virgin Birth of Christ, says: "That the great bulk of the opposition to the Virgin Birth comes from those who do not recognize a supernatural element in Christ's life at all."

Our view of the Virgin Birth has to do with the view we take of the person of Christ as well as of the Miracles. Dr. MacCartney says: The Christian Church holds that it was the fact of the Virgin Birth that gave rise to the belief in the Virgin Birth. There are some exceptions to this rule, but as a general thing, those who accept the Incarnation, also accept the Virgin Birth, while opposition to the Virgin Birth usually comes from those who reject the Supernatural and Miraculous elements of Christ's life as a whole.

There has never been anything like the Virgin Birth before or since. The Prophets foretold it and the Child Jesus was born according to Prophecy in Bethlehem of Judea. The Biblical and historical record is strikingly clear and complete.

Some Mode of Birth Necessary.

If Jesus was pre-existent and eternal, then some mode of birth was necessary, and there was no alternative between the Virgin Birth and the ordinary mode of human generation, no other mode than the Virgin Birth suggested in the New Testament. Jesus did not spring from the earth. He was sent here by His Father from the other side. If Christ was pre-existent before His Birth, how did He cross the line? The Bible says, and the belief of the Church for two thousand years answers: "By the Virgin Birth." This answer is being fiercely attacked in some quarters, but Christians need not be disturbed over this, for truth will always prevail. Being born of a Virgin didn't make Jesus God. He was born of a Virgin because He was God.

But how is this question to be settled: It can't be settled by public debates, and unqualified debaters. It can't be settled by heated controversy. In the last analysis the Virgin Birth is a question for scholarship to settle. It belongs to the field of Exegesis, Biblical interpretation, and Church History. It is the result of the research and opinion of the best scholarship that I desire to bring you on this question of the Virgin Birth. In doing so, I want to follow the advice of Dr. James Moffatt to students in the Preface of his "Introduction to the Literature of the New Testament", in which he says "The first commandment of research is "Thou shalt work at the sources"; the second is: "Thou shalt acquaint thyself with work done before thee and beside thee." With that idea in mind, let us go to the sources of authority on this subject. The Records, Dr. James Orr says: "The wealth of Manuscripts for the Gospel is without parallel in literature."

What Is the Proof That Jesus Was Born of a Virgin.

Let us go to the records—the Synoptic Gospels. The only two Gospels that speak of His Birth say He was born of a Virgin. We shall begin with St. Luke. It is not the oldest Gospel, but, perhaps, the most carefully composed. In a sense it is a reply to the minds of men impressed with the preaching of the Gospel, and who wondered who this strange and marvelous man with love sufficient to die for mankind, who was He? How, and when did He first appear? Who were His parents, and what were the circumstances connected with His birth? No one could better understand the need of an answer to these questions of the heart of the world than St. Luke, for he was an historian and we see by his history of the Apostolic Church —the Book of Acts. He was also a physician whose opinions ought to be worth something about the birth of the Son of God into the world. He begins his Gospel by adding what Mark in the first Gospel written had omitted, the Birth of Christ.

Luke's Gospel is the record of exact history. Jesus didn't come for His own age alone, but for all ages. Therefore, the authentic facts of His birth and life must be given to the world. Dr. Riddle, Professor of New Testament Exegesis in the Seminary when I was there gave two unfailing proofs of scholarship. First, to verify the facts; second, to discriminate between the things that are worth while. Both of these rules apply to the Historian, and both were used by Luke. This idea is supported by the introduction to Luke's Gospel. After reference to other writers, he says: "It seems good to me also, having traced the course of all things accurately from the first, to write unto thee in order, most excellent Theophilus, that thou mightest know the certainty concerning the things wherein thou wast instructed." Luke had sources of information which are closed to us. Even his own opinion is of high value. He was a scholar and a historian.

Striking Feature About the Virgin Birth.

The striking feature about the Virgin Birth as recorded by Luke is this: He first tells us that the Angel Gabriel appeared unto Zacharias, when he was in the Temple, and said: "Thy wife Elizabeth shall bear thee a son, and thou shalt call his name John." Thus John the Baptist, the last of the Old Testament Dispensation, is intimately joined to the conception and birth of Jesus whose forerunner he was to be.

Then the Angel went to Nazareth. When there, he called upon a virgin named Mary, who was espoused to Joseph and said to her: "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: Therefore, also that Holy Thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God." When the Angel told her about her cousin Elizabeth going to bear a son, and Mary went nearly a hundred miles into the hill country and entered the home of Elizabeth, what happened? Before she had time to tell Elizabeth the message of the Angel to her, Elizabeth spake with a loud voice and welcomed her as the Mother of the Lord. Mary's answer was: "My soul doth magnify the Lord." Not her unborn son, but the unborn Lord.

Matthew said: "Now the birth of Jesus Christ is on this wise." Then he proceeds to tell about Mary's espousal to Joseph, and the Angel said to Joseph: "Fear not to take unto Thee Mary, thy wife, for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost, and she shall bring forth a son and thou shalt call His name Jesus, for He shall save His people from their sins." In the disclosures made to Matthew, the birth of Jesus is represented as being supernatural, the mission of Jesus as being remedical, and the nature of Jesus as divine.

These two accounts come from independent sources. They were written from two different points of view, but they both agree on the all important fact that Jesus was conceived by the Holy Ghost and born of the Virgin Mary. These two accounts also agree that His birth was supernaturally announced beforehand, in the one case to Joseph, and in the other case to Mary. Both of these Gospels, though differing in details of the narrative, unequivocally state that Joseph had no place in the parentage of Jesus, and that the place of the human father had been taken by the direct action of the Holy Ghost.

Announcement to Joseph and Mary.

In Matthew, the announcement is made to Joseph, in Luke it is made to Mary. While Zacharias is told about the birth of John, Joseph plays not the slightest part in the mystery of the birth of Jesus. Mary is entirely in the forefront. To her the angel addresses himself. Joseph says nothing. He keeps himself in the background. His place is that of a guardian of Mary, a protector of Jesus. But this is what I want you to get into your mind. The same record that tells us He is divine, also tells us He was born of a Virgin. How can we consistently accept the one and reject the other? The Supernatural element cannot be eliminated from the Virgin Birth unless you eliminate everything from the Bible that is supernatural.

The first man, Adam, was created and God "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and he became a living soul". Jesus, the last Adam, was not a new creation, but is conceived and born of the old race through the Virgin Mary, but generated by the exclusive act of the Holy Spirit without the cooperation of human paternity.

If we believe that God created the first Adam without a human father, why should it be thought a thing incredible to believe that Jesus, the last Adam, was born into the world without a human father? It is easier to believe the record concerning these things than it is to believe the excuses offered for not believing them.

When Joseph and Mary went up to Bethlehem to be enrolled, this child of promise was born and they laid Him in a Manger, because there was no room for them in the Inn. The Shepherds were in the fields watching their flocks and the Angel came unto them and said: "Behold I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the City of David a Saviour which is Christ the Lord. And this shall be the sign unto you: Ye shall find the Babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger. And suddenly there was with the Angel a multitude of the Heavenly Host praising God and saying 'Glory to God in the Highest, and on earth, peace and good will towards men" (Luke 210-14). And then the Shepherds went and found Mary, Joseph and the babe, lying in the manger, verifying what the Angel had told them.

Whole Thing Is a Miracle.

And still there are people who tell us that they do not believe in Miracles. The whole thing is a Miracle. Christ's birth is a Miracle. Christianity itself is a Miracle. Instead of being surprised at Miracles concerning Christ, we should be surprised if there were none. Augustine, one of the greatest thinkers of all times, said: "The establishment of Christianity without miracles would be a greater miracle than the resurrection itself." And the Christianity of his day, and the Apostolic days, included the Virgin Birth. They tell us Jesus was born like any other child. Go back to Prophecy, the Annunciation, the visit of the Angel Gabriel to Mary and Joseph, the visit of the Angel to the Shepherds, and the singing of the Heavenly Host: "Glory to God in the Highest, and on earth peace and good will toward men" and then tell me what other child ever had a birth like that.

When you deny the Virgin Birth, you throw away the key that unlocks the mystery of His life. He was a man, yet God; an infant, yet the Almighty; born, yet everlasting. His mother's maker, yet His mother's son, one whom a manger holds, yet one whom the heavens cannot contain. Who is He? The Angel says: "And thou shalt call His name Jesus, for He shall save His people from their sins." Who was His mother? The Angel answers: "And the Virgin's name was Mary." Mary was the eternal vindicator of her sex, whose seed was to bruise the head of the serpent, and dispel the shame of our race.

P. Whitwell Wilson says of Mary: "One cannot imagine a girl less likely to be deluded into thinking the Angel Gabriel had visited her. Of that scene she is, perforce, the only witness, but her evidence has stood two thousand years of cross examination and when I read her story, so candid and simple, I cannot believe her capable of defending her innocence against suspicion by putting forward so tremendous a blasphemy as a fabrication Annunciation." But that is exactly what she did, if her story is untrue.

The next question is: ARE THE RECORDS AUTHENTIC?

The favorite line of argument against these records is that they contradict each other in some details, but Oscar Holyzman, a critical writer, in his Life of Christ says: "A contradiction between these two narratives of Matthew and Luke does not exist, even in regard to places of residence and there is no need of assuming one." These two chapters containing the account of the Virgin Birth have been called an interpolation. But there is no ground for such an opinion. The first two chapters are found in all unmutilated Manuscripts. Weiss says: "There never were forms of Matthew and Luke without the infancy narrative." They are retained by the most distinguished scholars of England and Germany, even Gunkle can see no reason for their excision.

Christ's Entrance Into and Exit From the World.

Suppose these two chapters should find no place in the story, what then? A writer in Hastings Bible Dictionary says: "It has been urged with truth that the whole of St. Luke's narrative is impregnated with the underlying idea that when Christ was born, His mother was a Virgin, and it is impossible to omit this element without destroying the whole."

The late Prof. Bruce, who was liberal enough for any one says: "The connection is so close that few who earnestly believe in the absolute worth of Christ's person will be disposed to deny the truth of the evangelical narratives relating to the manner of His entrance into, and exit from the world."

The proof of the Virgin Birth rests upon the credibility of these records, Dr. Scott, a Roman Catholic Priest and educator of Boston, in an article on the Virgin Birth, says: The story comes from the record of the Gospels. If the New Testament is not accepted as history, we must reject the whole history of ancient documents of Apostolic Times, for no other book in the world is so well attested as to genuineness and authenticity as the record of the New Testament. This is the verdict of the most scholarly critics of the world today. The Gospels of Matthew and Luke declare the Virgin Birth and in order to set the Virgin Birth aside, the historical value of these Gospels must be denied or else the Virgin Birth can't be rejected.

Prof. Charles A. Briggs, of Union Seminary, a critical scholar, says: "Criticism is the test of the certainty of knowledge, and the method of its verification." I will give you a summary of Dr. Briggs' conclusions on the Virgin Birth.

Dr. Brigs says: "The lower criticism confirms the Virgin Birth. The higher criticism confirms the Virgin Birth. Thus all departments of Biblical criticism, textual criticism, historical criticism, and Biblical Theology verify and confirm the Virgin Birth as a dogmatic fact. Who ever accepts the Bible as final is compelled to accept the Virgin Birth as an Article of Faith". That is a pretty strong statement to come from a great scholar and critic like Professor Briggs.

The Argument of Silence.

Now we come to the argument of silence. We are told that Mark and John made no mention of the Virgin Birth and that the writings of Paul are silent on the Virgin Birth. But the argument of silence is not very reliable. It either proves too much, or it doesn't prove anything. The fact that the Virgin Birth isn't mentioned by the writers of the other two Gospels or by Paul doesn't prove that they were unfamiliar with it or that they rejected it. The important thing is that the two Gospels mentioning the Birth of Jesus say He was born of a Virgin. Sir James Melville, at the Court of Mary, Queene of Scots, never once mentions the name of John Knox, the great reformer of Scotland, but history proves the existence of John Knox and we all believe that he lived.

Mark's Gospel is a record of the public ministry of Christ. It begins with His baptism and does not go back to His Childhood at all. It has to do only with the last three years of His life. It is worth while mentioning that his gospel begins with the significant words: "The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God." What made him think He was the Son of God? We know Mark was the son of Mary, in whose home the Church met in the early days to worship. There he must have met the mother of Jesus and knew something about His birth as well as His life.

The Gospel of John does not mention His birth directly. John certainly knew the story of the Virgin Birth, for he wrote at a time when the Virgin Birth was an article of belief in the Church. Besides, Mary was put in the care of John by the Lord Himself, and probably remained with him until she died. John's silence does not imply ignorance, but tacit acceptance. Unless the story is contradicted by John, the presumption is that it is accepted. John's Gospel begins by referring to the Pre-Existence of Christ. He says in the prologue "The Word was made flesh and dwelt among us (and we beheld His glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father'." Where did He dwell? Among us, on earth. John surely knew about the Virgin Birth and recognized Him as the Divine Word (Logos) made flesh.

Paul Does Not Deny It.

They tell us that Paul didn't know about the Virgin Birth, because he didn't mention it in his Epistles. He certainly does not deny it. He must have known it, he was a close friend and co-worker with Luke, the writer of the Third Gospel. It is reasonable to believe that they didn't talk it over. Paul's great theme that he constantly kept before the Church was the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. He didn't think it necessary to add to what the Gospel writers had said about His birth.

How strong Paul affirms the solidarity of the human race with Adam. "Through the one man's disobedience the many were made sinners." Then he set forth Jesus in contrast with Adam, the new head of the race, the righteous one, through whom this evil condition was to be reversed. To Paul, the birth of Christ was no ordinary birth. He speaks of Jesus as "God sending His own Son in the likness of sinful flesh." Yet, there is a distinction; He is one of us, but not of us. It is in "The Likeness", but without sin. As Luke puts its: "That Holy One shall be born," because a higher power shall be concerned in His origin. No other explanation of such an origin is known, except that given in Luke's Gospel "conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary".

Dr. Briggs says: "If St. Paul knew it not, he was certainly very near it, and he implies in his teachings something so near it and like it that no one has ever been able to suggest anything in substitution for it, that would not undermine and destroy his entire Theology."

The doctrine of the Virgin Birth was held by the early Church. Ignatius, who lived in the beginning of the second century, laid great stress on the Virgin Birth. Justine Marty is a still more important witness. The reference shows that he was well acquainted with the writings of Matthew and Luke. Tatian, a disciple of Justin Marty, wrote the diatessaron, a harmony of the Gospels and included the story of the Virgin Birth as told by Matthew and Luke.

Our Faith in the Virgin Birth.

The statement is often made that the Virgin Birth has nothing to do with our belief in Christ. But I can't see how our faith in the Virgin Birth can be separated from the other elements of our faith in Christ. This view seems to be supported by the authorities on this subject.

Hastings' dictionary of the Gospels has an extended article on Luke's Gospel, alluding to the Virgin Birth as follows: "While St. Matthew's first chapter and St. Luke's second chapter strenuously asserts it, there can be no doubt that when once the question was raised, it was answered in widely different churches in no uncertain way. East and West, at Rome and in the provinces, belief in the Virgin Birth became a test of orthodoxy. This view is held by Dr. Orr.

During the second century, what we find Dr. Orr says: "Is the universal acceptance of the Virgin Birth, not simple as a truth believed in, but an article of the highest doctrinal importance, by the acceptance of which a genuine is distinguished from a spurious."

Dr. Briggs holds the Virgin Birth essential to the faith of the Church, but makes an exception on behalf of certain individuals. He says "the doctrine may for various reasons be so difficult for them that they cannot honestly accept it."

Scholarship is largely on the side of the Virgin Birth. Dr. Orr says: "If Scholarship is to be the test, we need not fear to meet our adversary in the gate." The majority of the great scholars of the Church accepted the Virgin Birth as well as the Reformed and Lutheran Churches, the Roman Catholic Church—in fact all Churches that accept Jesus as law accept the fact that He was conceived by the Holy Ghost and born of the Virgin Mary. This testimony ought to count for much more than the opinion of a few isolated individuals.

Bishop Gore says: "If Christ's subsequent life was miraculous and His mode of exit from it, beyond all doubt this fact conditions the evidence of His nativity."

Dr. Orr, after reviewing the doctrinal significance attributed to the Virgin Birth by some of its opponents, says: "What, I ask, does all this mean, if not that, in view even of these writers, narratives of the Virgin Birth are saturated with doctrinal significance? It seems to me that the Virgin Birth, its connection with the other truths, about the Lord's person, cannot be other than essential." The story of the miraculous conception is doctrine translated into history. The doctrinal motive is the very essence of it. Its connection with the view taken of Christ's person is absolute; that character, surely it does not lose, if refusing to regard it as a myth, we accept it as history.

Essential to the System of Doctrine and Faith.

On this point Dr. Briggs says: "When it is said that the doctrine of the Virgin Birth is essential, it is meant that it is essential to the system of doctrine and faith of the Christian Church." He also says: "They cannot possibly recognize the birth of Christ was by ordinary human generation, for that would be a revival of the Nestorian heresy, and a denial of the Christian philosophy of the centuries, with all the serious consequences therein involved. It would turn back the dial of Christianity nearly two thousand years; it would break with historic Christianity and its historic foundations and imperil Christianity itself."

These are strong words from these great leaders of Christian thought, men who are internationally known and recognized as among the great scholars of the world. I believe in the Virgin Birth myself, because I believe the records of Scriptures, and because a doctrine so universally held by the Church for so many centuries must have much of truth and merit in it.

No man but Jesus has ever been called "the sinless One". In no case in the world's history has a human being been produced by natural generation who has been sinless. Those holding the humanitarian view of Christ all hedge, when brought face to face with it. Prof. Foster, in his book on "The Finality of Religion", says: "He is the best we know." Professor Bruce says: "A sinless man is as much a miracle in the moral world as a Virgin Birth is in the physical world." But they cannot explain either one. If we deny His Virgin Birth, we cannot account for His unique life. We cannot explain His life in any other way. Christ is not the product of natural force. He is the Son of God. I would like to ask those who believe Jesus was only a man, but a superman born of human generation, why nature didn't repeat and produce another. But no one else like Him has been produced by that method. If the method, is sound, it wouldn't have stopped with one, but would have produced many instead of one.

Dr. R. S. MacArthur says: "If we admit the account given in the Gospels of His divine birth and divine origin, all His life is easily explicable." He was easily the greatest man of the ages because He was the Son of God.

PLAIN BIBLE STUDIES

Prepared by J. T. Bougher.

Note: In this new series of studies effort will be made to set forth in brief form wondrous things that God would have us know as told in His own eternal words.

Lesson No. 11.

Topic—Wonderful Truths About Satan, not generally known, and the world inclined to ignore.

This mysterious and terrible personage is of great power, authority and knowledge, yet how few know any thing of the revelations of God concerning Him. In fact, His chief masterpiece is to conceal His existence. In power he ranks next to God, and controls vast numbers of demons, fallen angels, and evil spirits, as well as all human beings, who have not been born into the family of God. He is referred to in Scripture under many different names, such as "prince of the power of the air"; "god of this world" (world systems operated by unregenerate humanity); "prince of demons"; "old serpent"; "evil one"; "wicked one"; "cherub"; "angel of light"; "devil"; "Lucifer"; "king of Tyrus", etc., and many others.

The following references will afford a comprehensive view of his personality, power, activity, and final doom, some of which are veiled as to title:

1. He is a person—1 Peter 5:8; Job 1:6-12.
2. Concerning his origin—Ezek. 28:14, 15.
3. His wisdom, beauty, and dazzling covering—Ezek. 28: 12-15.
4. His pride and self-exaltation—Isa. 14:13, 14.
5. His consequent fall from Heaven—Isa. 14:12.
6. He is the "god of this Age"—2 Cor. 4:4; John 14:30-16:11.
7. Restrained by the Holy Spirit—2 Thess. 4:8.
8. Has great power—Matt. 4:8, 9; Jude 9:—
9. Has deceiving and transforming ability—2 Cor. 11:14.
10. Ever seeks human control—Gen. 3:1-5; 2 Cor. 11:3; Mark 5:9.
11. All unbelievers blinded by him—2 Cor. 4:4.
12. Has his own ministers and false workers disguised as followers of Christ—2 Cor. 11:13-15; 1 Tim. 4: 1; Gal. 1:6-9.
13. He is a tempter—Gen. 3:1-5; Matt. 4:1-3.
14. Airel Heavens and Earth, the sphere of his activity—Eph. 2:2—:6:12; Job 1:7; 1 John 5:19.
15. His false teachers to introduce damnable heresies, including false "science"—2 Peter 2:1; 1 Tim. 6:20; 2 Tim. 3:5.
16. Hinders the work of God—Matt. 13:19, 25, 39.
17. Accuses the brethren—Rev. 12:9, 10.
18. Performs wonders—2 Thess. 2:9.
19. Will flee if we resist him—Jas. 4:7; 1 Peter 5:8, 9.
20. Believers' warfare and victory—Eph. 6:10-18.
21. His works destroyed through Christ—1 John 3:8-10; Heb. 2:14.
22. Will incarnate himself in anti-Christ near the close of this age—Daniel 8:23; 2 Thess. 2:3, 8; 1 John 2:18; Rev. 13:1.
23. Is to be bound and sent to the pit—Matt. 25:41; Rev. 20: 1-3;; 7:10.
24. Lake of fire his final doom—Rev. 20:10.

Dear reader, if you do not believe the above, you are within the class of "unbelievers" referred to in Rev. 21:8, and whose awful destiny is also declared therein. What a solemn moment, as we decide for Satan, and the lake of fire forever, or for Christ and eternal glory.

INTO THE TEMPLE OF THE LIVING GOD

By the Reverend J. Ross Stevenson, D. D.

President of Princeton Theological Seminary.

(Sunday, December 4, will be observed as Golden Rule Sunday in behalf of the war orphans of the Near East. The plan has been endorsed and cooperation is being given by many prominent individuals and organizations. We wish to commend this work and are glad to publish the following article.—Editor.)

FOLLOWING the Lausanne Conference it was my privilege to visit Greece and receive first-hand impressions of Near East Relief. Between this Christian service and the World Conference on Faith and Order there is a logical connection. Along with the Christian convictions which all who love our Lord alike cherish, there are the deeds of mercy in which they should unitedly engage. So it was fitting that during the sessions of the Conference at Lausanne there should be a meeting attended by representatives of the different communions to consider together the present work and the future claims of this great inter-church enterprise among the destitute populations of the Near East. The trip from Switzerland to Greece was a long and trying one in the hot, dry month of August, but we regarded the experience as among the most inspiring and rewarding of our lives. To visit stately cathedrals, consult with venerable and gracious princes of the Church, and hear of plans to conserve ancient traditions and fundamental beliefs, was impressive; but more challenging still was it to come into contact with the young lives which are being built into the temple of the living God.

Our visit to refugee camps, schools and orphanages impressed us deeply, first because of the character, devotion and service of the Near East Relief workers. These are men and women of vision, of fine culture, wide experience, in love with their tasks, and wholly equal to the responsibilities which rest upon them. It was a real privilege to confer with them regarding the specific problems each one had to face, together with the wider relations of these problems to the general welfare of the people, and to the desires of those at home who are contributing so generously to the work. One is bound to be impressed also by the equipment, the buildings of one kind and another, which have been secured at the smallest expense and which are so admirably adapted to the purpose in view.

But one needs to see the beneficiaries themselves of this great enterprise, to realize its highly multiplied worth. Our first introduction to those who had been rescued and trained by Near East Relief workers was at a meeting of some fifty Armenian boys, organized into a young men's league, assembled in a modest yet substantial building for an evening of social intercourse after the day's hard labors were over. They represented various trades and occupations. They are now self-supporting, are concerned about the future of their own race, and each one is eager to make the largest possible contribution to his day and generation. Their gratitude for what has been done on their behalf, their response to the religious appeals that are made, their expressions of good will towards our own nation were most reassuring and inspiring.

The crowning event of our visit was on the Island of Syra. We were fortunate in being able to spend a Sunday there. This had some disadvantages as we could not see the boys and girls at work in the school or in the shop. However, we could visit the rooms in which their training is carried on, see their tools, the standards set before them, and observe some of the products of their skill. On the other hand, we were privileged to attend the Sunday services, which for reverence, religious devotion and manifest spiritual profit could hardly be excelled. To see there fifteen hundred orphans rescued from privation, suffering and threatened death, and behold the look of contentment, comfort and hopefulness on their radiant faces; to hear their ringing notes of gladness as they sang praises to our Redeemer; to note their eagerness to learn and the marked evidence of rapid progress: all contributed to an ever memorable experience, coupled with thankfulness, for every one can have a part through Near East Relief in making it all possible. Even more impressive was a twilight service for the boys alone, who stood at quiet, reverent attention through the entire hour and took part in the whole order of worship in an interested and intelligent way.

We were told that the average age of these orphans is eleven years, and it will be five years more until their care and education is completed, so that they may be able to shift for themselves, which means that the work of the Near East Relief should be continued for this length of time. When these children at sixteen years of age are placed in homes and given the opportunity to make their own living, experience is already proving that they are not only competent, but that they live according to high ethical standards and make a real contribution to an environment which greatly needs wholesome moral and religious influences. The unique service for "post-orphans", in which the Near East Relief personnel keep close to those who have gone out from orphanages, seeing that they get "a square deal" and counselling them regarding peculiar temptations and problems which are bound to arise, is the right way to conserve moral and spiritual values.

Other gratifying contacts which I had with the work might be mentioned, but enough has been written to justify the conviction that Near East Relief is an enterprise concerning which no contributor need have the slightest misgiving; on the contrary, every one who has had a part in the work abroad in the field of active service, or at home in the maintenance of an adequate base, is identified with a service widely multiplying in its character and influence, and has every reason to "thank God and take courage".

CLEMENT OF ALEXANDRIA

CLEMENT of Alexandria was a famous teacher of theology in the great city of his birth. He conducted, in succession to its founder, the great Catechetical School of Alexandria. He was contemporary with Irenaeus of Gaul, and Tertullian of Africa, in the last quarter of the Second Century, dying about 220 A. D. These three men, Irenaeus, the representative of the Asian Church; Clement, of the Egyptian, and Tertullian, of the African, leave no doubt in their testimony as to the estimation in which the whole Church regarded the New Testament. It was to these three men, representing all branches of the Church at that day, the very inspired Word of God, and the sole divine rule and standard of faith and morals. So much are students of the Canon impressed by this, that Bishop Westcott declares that there was at least one matter in which there was general Catholic consent, and that is the divine and final character of the Scriptures of the New Testament.

Clement was a philosopher deeply read in the Greek schools, before becoming a Christian under the influence of Pantaeaus, his master and predecessor in the Catechetical School. He never quite freed himself from certain conceptions of his Greek masters, but he wrote voluminously on Scriptural interpretation. His testimony, therefore, to the sole authority of the Scriptures, in view of his profound admiration for Greek philosophical writers, is most noteworthy.

We quote some of the things he says:

"Both the Old and the New Testaments were given by the one God through the Son."

Replying to the heathen, who objected to Christianity that it was divided into numerous sects, he says:

"It is necessary to learn demonstratively from the Scriptures themselves how, on the one hand the sects were deceived, and how on the other, the most perfect knowledge and that which is the best sect is in the truth alone and the ancient Church."

So that Scripture proofs (demonstrations) are needed to arrive at the knowledge of the truth and of the Church.

"We persuade by giving perfect proof respecting the Scriptures from the very Scriptures themselves: our proofs commending themselves to faith."

"They who strive to acquire the knowledge of those things that are of the greatest excellence, will not desist from the search for the truth until they receive from the Scriptures themselves the proof (of it)."

"When we have got the better of them (certain heretics) by showing that they are clearly opposed to the Scriptures, you will find the leaders of such heresy, do one of two things—they either give up the consequences of their own teaching or they surrender the prophecy itself, i. e.: their very hope."

"God leads by the divinely inspired Scriptures."

"The truth is found . . . by confirming each of the things sought to be proved by the Scriptures from like Scripture."

"The ecclesiastical rule (elsewhere called the rule of truth) is the consent and harmony of the Law and the Prophets with the Covenant (or Testament) that was delivered by the advent of our Lord."

"The truth is to be explained through the harmony of the Covenants (or Testaments)."

It is clear that Clement considered the Old and New Testaments as constituting one harmonious revelation of God's truth. We must search the Scriptures as a whole to find the Truth: for Scripture truth is ultimate.

GEOLOGY AND EVOLUTION

By Nelson F. Dame

PART I.

OUR Religion is very closely related to a long series of alleged historical FACTS: so closely related that, in the minds of many, the religion stands or falls with the truth or falsity of these alleged facts. For instance: (1) the Bible gives an account of the origin of this physical universe, "the heavens and the earth", and of the birth from chaos of form and order on this planet. (2) It tells of the beginnings of the several kingdoms of life on the earth, and of the origin of species. (3) It has much to say of the "making" of man, and of his relation to the animal kingdom; and it declares that the first men were of great size and lived to very great age. (4) It tells something of the origin of language, and of the invention or discovery of the early arts and processes. (5) it describes quite minutely the wreck of "the world that was" by a deluge of vast proportions, and of the saving of a small remnant of the race by means of an "ark" or boat, etc., etc., etc.

Now Science, in some of its many departments, deals with these same things. Astronomy, geology, biology, botany, archaeology, all touch these alleged facts at some point or other. And we are very much concerned to know the results at which Science arrives in regard to these matters.

Science is organized human knowledge. And our religion claims to have a revelation from God conveying knowledge to men on certain subjects. And where Science and Revelation meet, we are deeply interested in knowing whether or not they agree. Of course, truth must agree with truth. Knowledge is knowledge, no matter how it is arrived at. So, if there be any real collision between alleged Science and alleged Revelation, we want to know it. For there must be a mistake somewhere. One or the other must be false.

As a matter of fact, there has been and still is very serious disagreement between alleged Science and our alleged Revelation as recorded in the Hebrew and Christian Scriptures. Some leaders of Science have denied nearly every statement of our alleged Revelation. And some of the teachers of the religion have derided as utterly false many generally accepted conclusions of Science. And like other collisions this has generated a good deal of heat on both sides.

We would not, if we could, discourage Science in any search after truth. Science ought not to be handicapped by being given an answer at which it must arrive or be anathema. It should be left entirely free to carry on its search for the truth in any manner that it sees fit, and in any direction that it chooses, and to ask any question and to get any answer that it can find.

But we have a right to demand that Science shall be true Science, not "Science falsely so-called", that it shall bring back from its excursions real knowledge, not some a priori inference or half-baked theory. Science should not be indebted to its imagination for its facts.

What do we mean by true Science? The principles and methods of scientific search for the truth have been laid down for all time by Bacon (1620) and Newton (1642), and they are universally accepted in principle by the entire scientific world today as the inductive method of study. It requires "that the searcher after the truth shall (1) gather all the related facts possible; that (2) he draw an inference that is consistent with all the known facts; that (3) he use that inference to help in the search for further truth; and that (4) if any new facts are discovered, the inference must be adjusted to suit the new facts".

All the other sciences, astronomy, physics, botany, chemistry, have long since adopted the inductive method: the principles of Bacon and Newton. Alchemy has given way to true scientific chemistry; astrology has given place to scientific astronomy; and so on down the line until we come to geology: the science which deals with the past history of the globe and the changes which have taken place upon it; and this "science", so called, is many years behind the times.

Of course, neither my opinion on this subject, nor that of any other layman, is of any real value whatever. But Herbert Spencer and Sir Henry Howorth, for instance, will be recognized as masters whose opinion ought to carry weight.

Now Herbert Spencer has an essay entitled "Illogical Geology", and he evidently had difficulty to keep within the bounds of parliamentary language when speaking of the absurd and vicious reasoning at the very basis of the whole current geological theory. He denounces some of the main "facts" on which geology rests as "untenable if analyzed" and "physically absurd". He then proceeds to show that the "science" of geology is "still swayed by the crude hypotheses it set out with; so that even now old doctrines that are abandoned as untenable in theory continue in practice to mold the ideas of geologists, and to foster sundry beliefs that are logically indefensible".

Sir Henry Howorth says on this subject: "It is a singular and notable fact, that while most other branches of science have emancipated themselves from the trammels of metaphysical reasoning, the science of geology still remains imprisoned in a priori theories."

Now it is quite unfortunate that the doctrines of evolution has to depend very largely upon the "evidence" furnished by geology; the one alleged science whose evidence is pronounced by many of the masters of science to be utterly untrustworthy, because it does not pursue its investigations according to the inductive method or correct principles of logic.

The theory of evolution, the monistic creed, makes a very strong appeal to many minds. The belief that "the entire hierarchy of animate organisms is the result of the continuity of one mode of operation throughout the whole period that has elapsed since life was first introduced into our planet", is an attractive theory. In the minds of many Christians "it harmonizes with our highest ideas of Divine foresight to believe that the scheme of evolution was originally made so perfect as to require no subsequent interference". It "banishes from geology the idea of sudden cataclysms and from zoology the idea of sudden creations". To their minds evolution means order, continuity, and progress; whereas, to their minds, the Biblical idea of creation seems to involve confusion, interruption, interference, and catastrophe. One is like the growth of a living flower; the other like the making of an artificial flower. If the choice lay between these two conceptions of the origin and development of things, one must of necessity choose evolution.

Of course, we are not shut up to any such choice as this; but the fact that to many minds this seems to be the case, and will explain the very curious fact that, while masters of science can and do disprove every fundamental principle of evolution, yet they hold on to evolution itself and believe in it to the quick of their souls. It has become an article of faith to them. They want it to be true, and even if they had no evidence at all for it, they would be sure that it is true, and that the evidence to prove it will appear in due time. The doctrine of evolution has acquired an impetus that enables it to run like the legendary machine without gas, oil, or water: solely on its reputation.

The doctrine of evolution is not, like Mohamet's coffin, suspended between heaven and earth. On the contrary, it rests upon solid foundation of alleged facts: facts that can be examined and tested by any one interested in the subject. One does not have to be a geologist, or a biologist, or a scientist, before he can examine the foundations of evolution. He needs to be simply a man of ordinary intelligence, with some knowledge of the writings of the great masters in their several fields of science.

Among the foundation facts are the following:

1. A Fixed Succession of Sedimentary Deposits. Open any textbook on geology as taught in our schools and colleges and universities today, and you will find a chart showing the various strata of which the earth's crust is built up. Beginning some miles down, at the (1) Archean (the beginning) or the igneous (fire marked) rocks, the strata are known as the (2) Cambrian, (3) Silurian, (4) Devonian, (5) Carboniferous, (6) Permian, (7) Triassic, (8) Jurassic, (9) Cretaceous, (10) Eocene, (11) Miocene, (12) Pliocene, and (13) Pleistocene, or the modern. These deposits, in their regular order, are believed to cover the earth like the successive coats of an onion.

2. A Fixed Succession of Life. These sedimentary deposits all show evidences of life of some kind, and they make it plain that all over the earth there has been a fixed succession of life-forms following each other, from the lowest to the highest. These life-forms are classified as the (1) Paleozoic (or primary), (2) the Mesozoic (or secondary), (3) the Cenozoic, or Cainezoic (or Tertiary), and the (4) Recent (or quarternary): the forms of life that exist on earth today.

3. The Development of the Higher Forms of Life From the Lower. Mr. H. C. Wells, in his Outline of History, shows how reptiles (amphibious animals which can live both in the water and on land) were developed from true fishes which breathe only through gills. Certain fish, thrown out of the water, struggled so hard to breathe that they developed the rudiment of lungs. They got back into the water, and transmitted this rudimentary lung to their offspring. Some of these, under similar conditions, developed that rudimentary lung into real lungs, which in turn were transmitted to their posterity, until eventually we had lunged fish and reptiles.

4. The Doctrine of Uniformity. This means that the quiet, orderly processes of nature which we see at work around us now have always gone on at this slow rate of speed, and have produced all the changes that have taken place on the earth. Of course, it has required long periods of time to produce these results by these slow processes. As one of the great scientists expresses it, there was no "beginning" in which creation began and ended. Creation, in the sense of the production of new forms of life, has always gone on, and is going on now, just as it did in "the beginning".

5. The Oscillation of the Continents. These sedimentary deposits, with their fossil remains of the various life-forms that they contain, were all made beneath the sea. The continents, they tell us, are slowly sinking beneath the sea in some places, and slowly rising out of the sea in others. They tell us, too, that fossils are still being made, as they have always been, and that fossil-bearing strata of clays and sand and gravel are still being deposited in the deep seas today, as they were of old. Then, in process of time, these deposits with their fossils will be brought to light by the steady oscillation of the continents.

6. The Inheritance of Acquired Characters. The development of the higher forms of living organisms from the lower has come about by the inheritance of acquired characters. Mr. H. G. Wells' fish, for instance, acquired the rudiment of a lung. This was an "acquired character" that did not originally belong to true fish. This they transmitted to their posterity They improved on it, and in turn transmitted what they had acquired to their posterity, and so on down the line. Herbert Spencer says that: "If there has been no inheritance of acquired characters, there has been no evolution." And Ernst Haeckel says that "belief in the inheritance of acquired characters is a necessary axiom of the monistic creed".

Here, then, are some of the fundamental bases of the doctrine of evolution. If any of these alleged facts should be disproved by science, what would become of evolution? If the sedimentary deposits do not actually occur in the given order, it is perfectly plain that the succession of life-forms which these deposits exhibit will have no basis to rest upon, and we should have land animals older than molusks, and reptiles retrograding into fish, etc. Of course, that would never do. Progress must go forward, not backward. Suppose again that the continents do not oscillate; sink down under the sea to receive their sedimentary deposits and then rise again, how in the world could we account for the great beds of shells in the San Bernardino Mountains, for instance, a mile and a half above sea level? Of course, the continents must oscillate. Suppose it were shown that there are no fossils being made now, that no such sedimentary deposits as we have in the rocks are now being made in the deep seas, what would become of the doctrine of uniformity, and several other things? Suppose it were shown that acquired characters are not, and cannot be, transmitted by heredity, what would become of the doctrine of evolution? Haeckel says that in that case we should be compelled "to accept a mysterious creation of all the species as described in the Mosaic account".

Now it happens that every one of these fundamental "facts" on which evolution rests has been denied, disproven, and sometimes flouted, not by laymen, not by the smaller size of scientists, but by the great masters of science, all of them evolutionists.

Huxley, for instance, in his "Discourses Biological and Geological" (Pp. 279-288), declares point blank that there is not "a shadow of proof for the doctrine of the fixed succession of strata all over the earth. And Herbert Spencer says that "the onion-coat hypotheses is dead". The sedimentary deposits do not follow the chart in our school books. They occur in every kind of sequence except that. For instance, in great sections of our country covering hundreds of square miles we have the Cambrian (that ought to be at the bottom), No. 2 in the chart, lying on the top of the Cutaceous, No. 9 in the chart. They occur in such haphazard order that a modern geologist declares (1) that any kind of rock, even the "youngest", may rest on the Archean; (2) that some of the very "oldest" rocks rest on the top of some of the "youngest"; and (3) "that any kind of fossiliferous rock may occur on any other kind of fossiliferous rock, old or young". In one word it may be stated that geology furnishes no evidence that any one deposit is universally or necessarily older than other other.

Again, as regards the succession of life, hear Mr. Huxley: "In the present condition of our knowledge and of our methods, one verdict—not proven and not provable—must be recorded against all the grand hypotheses of the paleontologist respecting the general succession of life on the globe."

Of course, if the strata do not follow each other in any fixed order, no fossil can be said to be generally and necessarily younger or older than any other fossil. And it is well to remember that the remains of men occur among the fossils.

Charles Darwin himself says (Origin of Species, p. 342): "Geology assuredly does not reveal any such finely graduated organic chain" (as his theory demanded), "and this perhaps is the most obvious and gravest objection which can be urged against my theory."

The "Face of the Earth", by Edward Suess of Vienna, is acknowledged by all to indicate the high water mark in geological literature. The one thought pervading this whole great work of Professor Suess is that absolutely nothing in the direction of an exchange of ocean and dry land (the oscillation of the continents) is now going on; and thus we have no modern analogies to explain how these great universal "transgressions" of the ocean took place in the past. In other words, uniformitarianism is now found to be bankrupt as an explanation of past geological changes. To quote his words: "The theory of the secular oscillations of the continents is not competent to explain the repeated inundation and emergence of the land." For even those localities, like Sweden and Greenland, which have supposed to exhibit the strongest evidence of the oscillation of the continents, Suess says that "Displacements susceptible of measurement have not occurred within the historic period" ("Face of the Earth", Vol. II., Pp. 540, 497.)

"THE WORD OF OUR GOD SHALL STAND FOREVER"

By George William Carter

Universal Bible Sunday, December 4, 1927.

TWO organizations have recently been formed, the object of each being to break down the moral teachings and influence of religion and the Bible. One of these, an Association for the Advancement of Atheism, boasts it has branches in various cities and a number of colleges. The other is the Anti-Bible Society, which claims as its object "to discredit the Bible" and by anti-Biblical literature—"to counteract the work of societies circulating the Bible as the Word of God".

We have seen some of this literature which is coarse, vicious and salacious. It aims at the destruction of God given institutions, the family, the Sabbath and the Church, at the break down of those moral and spiritual ideals found in Jesus Christ and in the Bible. The New York Bible Society received a letter recently which stated: "Your Bible will be consigned to the junk pile before this century is out." Much more than a century ago Voltaire boasted that in less than a hundred years the Bible would be practically an unknown book. But so far from this being true, since his time its circulation has enormously multiplied and is today the most treasured, the most sought after Book in existence. It has been carefully estimated that over thirty million copies of the Scriptures are circulated every year, and the Book is available in over eight hundred languages and dialects. It is the best selling Book in the world.

In summing up the case against an atheist editor who was being tried for blasphemy, a Toronto Judge addressed the jury in part as follows:

"Probably nothing is more sacred to us than our religion. We have ever been taught to reverence the name of God. . . . . We are prepared to say that love of God and trust in Him are the very foundation of our nation's greatness.

"The Bible, the Holy Scriptures, are to us the revelation of God's will concerning us and all His people. We look upon the Bible as the basis of every good law in our country. It is to us the dearest and most precious Book in all the world. Sooner would we fail with every other book than the Bible. It is in reality to us the Book of books. It is always painful to hear any person question any part of the Bible."

There is both good sense and fairness in the words of this Judge. The best way to meet the challenge of the adversary is by the Living Word itself, and by a larger distribution of the Scriptures. The challenge is an opportunity which the Society presents to its friends—to circulate a hundred thousand Gospels, ten thousand Testaments, a hundred Bibles, or a single Bible. Whatever number any individual will be responsible for will be so many additional copies of God's Word circulated. New York Bible Society, 5 East Forty-eighth Street, New York, N. Y.

An Advent Bible Study

The Rev. Henry Ward, Rector of Bispham Parish, Blackpool, England.

Aim of Lesson—How to Learn and Use the Bible—Deut. 4:1-13; 2 Tim. 3:14-17; 2 Peter 1:20, 21.

1. How Was the Bible Written? Many Writers who lived in different ages. One Author—God—What Is Inspiration?—"A Breathing into." Holy Ghost inspired men of old. It is God's Message to man. God spoke, Men Wrote—2 Peter 1:21.

2. What Did They Write?—The contents may be divided as follows: Old—Pentateuch, 5 Books of Moses; History, 12 Books—3 in Canaan, 6 in Kingdom, 3 After Captivity; Poetry, 5 Books; Major Prophets, 5 Books; Major Prophets, 5 Books; Minor Prophets, 12 Books.

New—Gospels, 4; History, 1; St. Paul's Letters, 13; General Letters, 8; Prophecy, 1.

3. Why Was It Written?—Teach Men of God—His object in Creation—God made man for Himself. His purpose in Redemption—Love for fallen man. His will for His people, holiness.

2. To Reveal the Lving Word—The Books of the Old Testament lead up to Him; the Books of the New Testament lead out from Him.

3. To Be Our Sword in Temptation, in Conflict—Our Lord Used it thus—Matt. 4:1:11; Deut. 8:3, 6:16, 6:13 and 20.

4. To Be Our Comfort in Sorrow and Suffering—Our Lord used it thus—Matt. 22:29-32; Ex. 3:6; Luke 23:46; Psalm 21:5.

Book Reviews

THE SACRED SCRIPTURES—"Concordant Version". Published by Concordant Publishing Concern, 2823 East Sixth Street, Los Angeles, Cal.

The copy before us is a pocket edition of the New Testament and not the complete edition, which is much fuller and higher priced. It is a very interesting and ambitious contribution to a better knowledge and clearer understanding of the Scriptures. It is an effort to give a more perfect translation of the Greek manuscripts into English equivalents. "It is not based on Scholarship or authority, but on the laws of language." The methods applied are purely scientific. Every teacher and preacher of the Gospel should have a copy at least of the pocket edition, which is published as low as a dollar.

The complete edition is a very remarkable book. There are photographs of every page of the three most ancient manuscripts extant, Sinaiticus, Vaticanus and Alexandrinus. Every letter and every variant is given in the larger edition. Underneath the Greek uncials is the English "sublinear translation".

A Key is in preparation which will give a complete command of its contents. It will consist of an English Concordance and Lexicon, a Greek Grammar, Reverse Index, a list of the Elements with English Standards, and a simple Elementary Greek Course.

"The Elements" lists every Greek element in alphabetical order. "Under each are all the words containing it, and their English standards and renderings. We know nothing like it heretofore. It is the backbone of the Version." Nothing so exhaustive has ever been attempted.

The "Foreword" by the compilers notes that "The Sacred Scriptures are inspired by God, hence are living and life-giving. Mortals cannot measure their heights or fathom their depths or exhaust their meaning. The usual method of translation demands a full understanding of the mind of God, which has not been given to any man. If no one knows all there is in the original, no one can tell it all in English. The Concordant Version is the only one which practically acknowledged this by basing its renderings on the laws of language rather than on the authority of scholars. It aspires to do for divine revelation what experiment and research have done for science."

The translation is literal and does not please the ear as the Authorized Version, but it throws much light upon dark places and helps to understand the Word. For example, Acts 28:23-28, gives the quotation from Isaiah, which has caused much perplexity among devout Christians, especially in the twelfth chapter of St. John's Gospel. St. Paul, in quoting it, agrees almost exactly with St. Matthew, in the thirteenth chapter, while St. Mark and St. Luke quote only a part. The Concordant translation makes it clearer. "Now setting a day for him, the majority came to him in the lodging, to whom he expounded, certifying to the Kingdom of God, and persuading them concerning Jeuss, from the law of Moses, as well as the prophets, from morning till dusk. And some, indeed, were persuaded by what he said, yet some disbelieved. Now there being disagreements one with another, they were dismissed, Paul making one declaration that 'Ideally the holy spirit speaks through Isaiah the prophet, to your fathers, saying:

"Go to this people and say,
Hearing, you will be hearing
And may by no means understand,
And observing, you may be observing
And may by no means be perceiving,
For the heart of this people was made stout,
And they hear heavily with their ears,
And they shut their eyes,
Lest at some time they may be perceiving with their eyes,
And should be hearing with their ears,
And may understand with their heart,
And should be turning about,
And I shall be healing them."

"Let it be known to you, then, that to the nations was this salvation of God dispatched, and they will hear."

IF I HAD ONLY ONE SERMON TO PREACH: Edited by Charles Stelzle. Published by Harper Brothers.

This is a very handsome volume of twenty-one sermons by twenty-one leading preachers of America. It is a very notable book. The publishers say of it: "We believe that these addresses express the outstanding convictions of the men selected to give them and that they constitute a contribution to American religious literature little short of epochal in character."

Our Bishops Brent and Freeman are among the contributors. Bishop Freeman taes for his theme the Birth of Jesus, "The greatest story ever told". Bishop Brent, just from Lausanne, submits "The Call to Unity", which he delivered there, and with which many of us are familiar. Dr. James Vance deals with the Deity of Christ from the text, St. John 1:1, "Is Jesus God?" and Bishop Warren Candler follows him on the Resurrection of Christ, "Incontestable Fact and Indispensable Truth", 1 Cor. 15:14. Dr. Gaines Glen Atkins speaks of the "Triune Entirety of the Christian Revelation", founding his discussion on the text, "I am the Way and the Truth and the Life".

Cardinal O'Connell, of Boston, contributes a brief sermon on "Christ, Priest and Victim", a glowing, mystical declaration of a deep and spiritual faith in Christ as God and Priest and Saviour. Rabbi Harrison's is the only address on behalf of other religious, "I Am a Hebrew".

The more practical aspects of life are dealt with by Dr. Robert Freeman, "The Gode Ye Have Chosen", "The One-Thing Man", by Frederick Shannon; "The Curse of Cynicism", by Dr. H. E. Fosdick; "Twin Perils", by Dr. Polig, and "Creative Freedom", by Dr. Harold Hough.

"What is Religion?" by Dr. Gillis, and "What is a Religious Life?" by Dr. John Haynes Holmes, offer some fresh and stimulating reading.

Dealing with the basic truths of the Bible are the addresses of Dr. Merrill, "Can I Believe in God?"; "The Perfect Salvation", by Dr. Merton Rice; "The Inspiration of Life", by Dr. Conrad, and "The First and Final Truth", by Dr. Joseph Fort Newton.

It is difficult to select the best from this list, but among the strongest appeals is that of Dr. Vance, "Is Jesus God?" and Dr. Merrill's "Can I Believe in God?" Most of us would be satisfied with these.

BACK TO THE OLD TRAIL: By Janet M. Ingles. Published by Evangelical Publishing House, Cleveland, Ohio.

In this day of lurid story-telling this is a remarkable book. May the Lord give it a wide circulation among young people. It might have been written by some Christian woman of the "seventies". If young people would read stories of this kind, there would be more real conversions in the Churches. What a vast difference between some of the magazines stories of today and a clean story of service and self-sacrifice, like this. "As the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts."

"Back to the Old Trail" means back to Christ, who is "the Way, the Truth and the Life". The story is full of interest and well told. It can be read in a day without fatigue.

Alice Hamblin, of New York, writes of it: "A timely, thrilling story for young and old! It is a positive testimony, in story form, of the truths held dear by all who believe the Word of God. Its message is invaluable."

Margaret E. Sangster, one of the world's best story-tellers, says: "The book is both interesting and inspiring. And in this day and age, the word inspiring means more than it used to! Especially would I recommend it to those younger people who are drifting away, perhaps, from the old ties."

The Sunday School Times, of recent date, reviews it at some length: "This attractive and unusual story, with its gripping heart interest and winning appeal, is written with a purpose which shines with clear light from the first page to the last. There is combined a romantic tale with deep spirituality. The characters are very true to life, and so real that the reader follows with deepening interest as through cloud and sunshine, grief, trial, and prosperity, the folk of the book find their way to the true path that leads to life. With all its fascination as a story, the book gives a ringing testimony for Christ and the power of the true Gospel, and will awaken an interest in many an indifferent one. It is exactly the kind of book that many are looking for to place in the hands of young people."

"The Achievement of Israel": By Prof. H. R. Purinton. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

"The Sermon on the Cross": By Van Tassel Sutphen. Harper and Brothers, New York.

"Present Tense Salvation": By Evangelist John W. Ham. The Bible Institute, Chicago.

"How Long to the End": By Philip Mauro. Hamilton Brothers, Boston.

"The Abiding Life": By Fred. W. Betts, D. D. The Murray Brothers, Boston.

"The Achievement of Israel" is by the author of "Literature of the Old Testament", and is published in a very handy, well-printed and readable form for use in the home, schools and Bible classes.

It is an outline history of Israel from the beginning to Our Lord's time. It is well arranged and just what many people have desired. The twenty-five chapters are divided into seven parts, which is the proper division of Israel's story. Shepherds, The Two Kingdoms, The Captivity, Persian Rule and Under the Greeks and Romans. It is well indexed, has a good list of reference books and several appendices.

A very delightful little book for any class of readers and costs only $1.25.

"The Sermon on the Cross" is by the rector of St. Peter's Church, Morristown, N. J., and was prepared for a three hours' service on Good Friday. The seven "words" of Christ from the Cross are very reverently and helpfully considered in these meditations. We were especially impressed with the meditation on the second word to the dying thief.

These precious words from the dying Saviour are very holy ground.

"Present Tense Salvation" is a series of fourteen "God-honored revival sermons". It is a well-bound book at a dollar and thirty-five cents. The sermons are outlines of great themes not fully "clothed" as the evangelist would deliver them. They will be useful to some who will study them and get thoughts and illustrations on such great themes as "The New Birth", "Great Salvation", "Walking With God", and "Divine Love".

"How Long to the End." This is a pamphlet of sixty pages, in which the author very briefly discusses (1) the "Great Tribulation", Daniel's Seventieth Week, (2) The Future of the Jewish Nation, and (3) the Millennium. Mr. Mauro was one of the ablest lawyers of Massachusetts and of the Bar of the United States Supreme Court. In the study of the book of Daniel and the Revelation of St. John, he had few peers on this side of the Atlantic. His larger work, "The Patmos Visions", has been pronounced by competent critics to be one of the clearest books on the Apocalypse ever published.

Of his important work on the book of Daniel the Bibliotheca Sacra says: "For the first time a satisfactory exegesis of the Seventy Weeks has been published. The author is an able lawyer, accustomed to weighing evidence, and he is also a profound student of the Bible. His line of approach is original and untrammeled by previous speculations.

It meets the demands of reason, tallies with all the facts, and upsets previous speculations, which have been anything but satisfactory. It is a book not only worth reading, but also worth having."

"The Abiding Life" is a group of over fifty brief essays or meditations on many human problems or phases of Christian living. We have not read them all, but those we did read are so uniformly practical and well presented we feel sure the book is of more than ordinary merit. Deep insight and spiritual wisdom are indicated in the treatment of many common things. Take this first paragraph in "The Mystery of Life" as an example: "Sensuality is an acute manifestation of the defect of dull minds. It is living in sensations, with no mind above each succeeding sensation. It is the expression of deficient imagination, an incapacity for dealing with life as a whole. The difference between the wise man and the foolish man is not, as the old preachers taught, that one has pleasures and the other has not. Both have pleasures, but one wallows, as it were, in his, while the other understands himself as one who participates in pleasure, but is himself more than the pleasure he enjoys. The food abandons himself to each impulse, has not thought above or beyond the moment, and his existence is little more than a succession of various nervous excitements."

"THE OLD IS BETTER."

Mr. Editor:

The Southern Churchman is a great comfort to me now, teaching just what I was taught in my nonage in old St. Martin's Parish, in Hanover, in the late forties and early fifties, under the Rev. William V. Bowers and Bishop Meade, and for many years after taught by the Southern Churchman under the Rev. Dr. Sprigg. It is "old-time 'ligion" I read in the Churchman now.

"Old-time 'ligion is good enough for me;
It suited Paul and Silas, it's good enough for me!"

"The old is better . . ."—(St. Luke 5:39).

Bible Sunday, December 4, 1927.

In accordance with its custom for many years the New York Bible Society is urging the observance by all denominations of "Bible Sunday", December 4. This Sunday, the third Sunday before Christmas has for many centuries been observed as Bible Sunday by one branch of the Christian Church. This year the date falls on the exact one hundred and eighteenth anniversary of the organization of the New York Bible Society, December 4, 1809. The special Anniversary Service of the Society will be held in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church on the evening of that day and the Rev. Dr. Henry Howard, the pastor, will deliver the address.

Scots in Regalia Meet at Vespers.

Leading clans of Bonnie Scotland, represented by more than three hundred kilted Scotsmen in full regalia of plaid, brooch, sporran, bonnet and dirk, foregathered the afternoon of November 27 to the tuneful lilt of bagpipes at the annual vespers service in the Chapel of the Intercession, Broadway at One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Street.

Two thousand persons crowded the edifice and made its vaulted arches ring with the singing of the Scottish national anthem, "Scots Wha Hae", and songs of the land of the heather. Many persons could not find room in the chapel.

The address of the afternoon was delivered by the Very Rev. H. Erskine Hill, provost of St. Andrew's Cathedral, Aberdeen, Scotland. He pleaded for assistance from America necessary to carry out plans for reconstructing St. Andrew's Cathedral in Aberdeen, Scotland. The contemplated structure would be a memorial to the consecration there on November 14, 1874, by the Scottish Bishops Kilgour, Skinner and Petrie of Dr. Samuel Seabury of Connecticut as the first Bishop of the Episcopal Church in America.

The provost was escorted to the pulpit by the Rev. Dr. Milo Hudson Gates, Vicar of the Chapel of the Intercession, who presided during the service. The prayer and benediction were said by the Rev. Dr. Caleb Rochford Stetson, rector of the church.

Bagpipe solos by Major Angus Fraser were a feature of the vespers. The cian representatives entered the church at the opening of the servic led by a band of pipers conducted by Major Fraser.—New York Times.

The National Council.

December 13, 14 and 15 will be the dates of the regular meeting of the National Council and its Departments.

Wedding.

Mrs. Marie Louise Tucker, of Maidens, Goochland County, and the Rev. John Letcher Showell, of Hughesville, Maryland, were quietly married by the Rev. Wm. W. Brander, assistant of St. James' Episcopal Church, Richmond, at St. James, November 23, 1927.

The bride is a daughter of Mrs. Mary Anderson Rudd and the late David T. Rudd, of Powhatan County, and is a graduate of Powhatan Institute. The groom is the son of Mrs. Margaret Letcher Showell and the late Robert J. Showell, of Berlin, Maryland, and a grandson of the late John Letcher, Virginia's war governor. He is a graduate of the University of Maryland, and an alumnus of the Theological Seminary of Virginia. He is now rector of Trinity Parish, Charles County, Maryland, in the Diocese of Washington.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Mass Service.

A mass service of all the Episcopal Churches in the diocese will be held Sunday, December 4, at eight P. M., in the Washington Auditorium, according to plans of the field department of Executive Council.

The clergy and choirs of the various churches will march in procession into the auditorium where seats on the stage will be reserved for them. Addresses will be delivered by Mr. Lewis B. Franklin, of the National Council, and the Rev. Arthur M. Sherman, President of Boone College at Wuchang, China. Members of the Laymen's Service Association will act as ushers. Seats will be open to the public and persons of every denomination are invited to attend.

Golden Anniversary Memorial Fund.

A special service in Bethlehem Chapel was held on November 30, when the Woman's Auxiliary made its annual presentation of the Golden Anniversary Memorial Fund.

Bishop Freeman was the preacher of the occasion and all members of the Woman's Auxiliary were invited to attend this service.

The offering will be devoted to the Golden Anniversary Memorial Fund, which has for its purpose the training of a woman mission worker for service in the Diocese of Washington.

A Sophia M. Wood Memorial has been undertaken by the Daughters of the King of St. John's Church, Georgetown, and will take the form of a closet of sick-room supplies in connection with the work of the Instructive Visiting Nurses in Georgetown.

New Diocesan Mission.

Bishop Garland Saturday afternoon, November 26, officiated at the ceremony of laying the cornerstone of the Parish House of the new Diocesan Mission, which the Protestant Episcopal Church has started at "Rhawnhurst" in the northeastern part of Philadelphia.

The Rev. A. R. Van Meter, Dean of the Convocation of Germantown, and the Rev. Paul Micou, rector, assisted the Bishop. Dean Van Meter made the address, representing his Convocation district.

For the purposes of the new mission and to provide for its future development, the Diocese has acquired ground at the highest point in the "Rhawnhurst" section. The completed building plans provide for, in addition to the parish house, the church and rectory properties, the three properties to form a single unit.

Until work on the additional buildings begins, the parish house will be used for worship as well as for other community and mission activities. The mission was organized about a year ago by the Rev. Paul Micou, rector of St. Luke's Church, Bustleton, with the approval and support of Bishop Garland and the Convocation of Germantown, and the Bishop appointed Mr. Micou to take charge of the new work in addition to his care of St. Luke's.

Rt. Rev. W. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop to Dedicate New Church House.

The new Community House of St. Bartholomew's Episcopal Church, Park Avenue and Fiftieth Street, will be dedicated by Bishop William T. Manning, assisted by the Rev. Dr. Robert Norwood, the rector, Tuesday, November 29.

The church was erected a few years ago when the Rev. Dr. Leighton Parks was rector and the congregation had moved from Madison Avenue and Forty-fourth Street. The original idea was to erect on the remaining space an ordinary parish house an a rectory. Dr. Norwood, however, influenced the vestry to use the ground only for the community house and have it front on Park Avenue with a green lawn.

The Community House was erected with funds realized from the sale of St. Bartholomew's Parish House, including a chapel and hospital in East Forty-second Street, near Second Avenue.

The price received by the vestry was reported to have been 1,600,000, and virtually all of it has been used in erecting and furnishing the Community House, it was said.

This is said to make the Community House the most costly in America.

The use of the Community House will be only for members, and membership will be $1 a month. Members are passed on by a Membership Committee, on which are some of the vestry, and others active in the church. Membership is limited to six hundred—half men and half women. As soon as any one resigns applicants will be accepted according to the date of application. Already there is a waiting list.

The Community House will be open every day except Sunday from ten o'clock in the morning until eleven o'clock in the evening. On Sunday many of the rooms will be used by Sunday-school classes.

It will not be necessary to be a communicant of the Episcopal Church in order to be a member. The membership is limited in number to the capacity of the house. Every Saturday will be "Open House Day".

On the ground floor is what is considered the finest swimming pool in any such plant. On the same floor is a gymnasium. Here indoor tennis and indoor basket ball can be played.

On the first floor is an auditorium where amateur threatricals will be given. Donald Young is the full-time dramatic director.

The second floor is given over to the offices of the many members of the staff and to a non-circulating library. Miss Nellie C. Young is the librarian.

The third is the Women's Floor. There are large parlors and lounge rooms equipped with folding card tables. Bridge will be allowed but no playing for money will be permitted. Miss Anna C. Reilly is in charge of this floor.

The fourth is the Men's Floor. There are spacious pool and billiard rooms, parlors and lounge rooms. On this floor also is a little grill where luncheon is at present served to the staff, but which after the dedication will be open to all members. Mrs. Bertha Kolb is the dietician.

The fifth is the Children's Floor. A feature of this is a kindergarten which has already opened. The tuition is $150 a year. There is a washroom equipped especially for very little children. There are special quarters for Boy Scouts and girls' organizations.

Collect for Second Sunday in Advent.

Blessed Lord, Who hast caused all holy Scriptures to be written for our learning, grant that we may in such wise hear them read, mark, learn and inwardly digest them, that by patience and comfort and Thy Holy Word, we may embrace, and ever hold fast, the blessed hope of everlasting life which Thou hast given us in Our Saviour Jesus Christ. "Nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners shall inhherit the kingdom of God."—1 Cor. 610.

Awake, O Church of Christ, awake!
'Gainst rum with all it's woe,
Renew your prayers, new efforts make,
To stop this deadly foe.

No drunkard shall His kingdom see,
God's holy word declares,
Drink blocks the way from joys to be,
And crowds life's path with snares.

Lord, may we as a nation prove
To nations far and near,
That Thou hast sent Thy Son in love
To save our souls from fear.

All ye, who in temptation's hour
The paths of peace forsake,
Slumber no more in Satan's power,
Look up to Christ. Awake!

The Blot on the Letter.

The first thing that you noticed on drawing the white sheet from the envelope was a spot of ink. The pen had caught in the paper and made a bad blot. The letter began, "You must pardon the blot; I am sorry for it, but this is the only sheet of paper I have here, and I shall have to send it anyway".

The paper was heavy and rich-looking; the penmanship was beautiful; the sentiment of the letter was most cordial, and the information it contained was pleasant and interesting—but the blot! It was the first thing you saw on opening the letter and the last thing you saw on putting it back into the envelope.

In the circumstances there was no harm in sending the letter, but what if it had been a letter written, not with ink, but with the spirit of the living God? What if it had been written, not on a tablet of paper, but on the tablet of the heart? For God says that His children are the epistles of Christ to the world.

What, then, of the blot on the epistle of life that Christ has written in our lives for the world of men to read? It is true of us, as it is true of the letter, that the blot, if there is a blot, shows above everything else on the page. The life may be as nearly perfect as possible; it may have many touches of beauty and many Christian qualities; it may be most attractive in various ways—but the blot! An unkind word, a selfish act, an unfair attitude, a questionable transaction, and the world will stop and stare at the blot while the beautiful letter of a Christian life, the epistle of Christ to men, is left unread.

What a precious thing is a letter from a friend! It is almost the friend himself. And yet how easily it is spoiled! What a precious thing is a Christian life! It is almost the same as Christ Himself. And yet how easily it is spoiled! One false move, and the blot is made, and the page of life is marred. —Youth's Companion.

A Tribute to the Bible.

Visitors to London will find an added attracticion this year in the eight mural paintings in St. Stephen's Hall, descriptive of the building of Britain. Sir D. Y. Cameron had the responsibility of allotting the chosen subjects to the different artist. The most popular painting is that by Sir George Clansen, which commemorates the long struggle of the British people for liberty of religious faith. The English Bible translated by Wycliffe lies open on the knees of an elderly scholar, around whom eager listeners are hearing the divine message. It is a tribute to the ancient Word. How long would liberty endure without the light of its revelation and the lightning of its judgment?—Exchange.

Play Instinct and Proper Conduct.

"Lunch will soon be ready, John," Mrs. Lewis announced to her four-year-old son.

The little fellow ran to the corner of the kitchen and took a small pan and towel from the nail beneath the sink. His mother put water in the pan which John had placed in a chair. Then John began to wash his hands and to sing:

"I washed my hands this morning,
so very clean and white."

He did a very good job both at singing and washing.

"I can't see my face, so Mother wipes it," he told his aunt and stood still while this was being done.

"When did this miracle occur?" the aunt asked when John had gone to the office to call his father. "He used to cry and scream when you tried to clean him up for meal-time."

"That was before I realized how much children love to play and sing and repeat rhymes," his mother smiled. "John discovered the cure himself. It happened in this way: One day he had been naughty and I made him sit in the corner. As usual he cried. I went about my work in the next room, but could still hear him. Suddenly his crying stopped; he laughed and I heard him talking to himself. My curiosity got the better of me and I went to the door to listen. He was reciting 'Little Jack Horner' and making all the gestures. That gave me an idea. I decided to use his love of play, verse and song to help him do the right things.

"Water is one of John's chief troubles. He loves a lot of water for a long time and dislikes a little of it for any time. By using song and action John now enjoys cleaning up before meals. Another nice thing we do comes at the end of a bath. It used to be that leaving the bathtub brought on a battle, now we say these words, fitting the proper action to them:

'I jump right out of the tub, tub, tub,
And with my towel I rub, rub, rub.'

"John used to leave toys strewn all over the floor. Nothing short of punishment would get him to put them in their box when he finished playing. After going through siege after siege with him, I decided to arrange two shelves under the windows in the dining-room and try the verse idea for getting him to put his toys away. I played the game first myself without asking him to join in, but soon he came of his own accord and has played the game ever since. This is what we say:

'My blocs live on the first shelf
My ball lives on the top
They're going home together
Just see them hop, hop, hop.'

Different toys are named until all have gone 'home'.

"Bedtime was another difficult time. Now to the tune of 'Little Drops of Water' we sing:

'I step aboard my steamship
To Slumberland I go
Quietly, so quietly,
So no one will know.'

The 'stepping aboard' gets him into bed, and keeping it a secret helps him get to sleep.

"I'm glad I thought of the plan. Children love to play and by giving them the words that suggest proper action, life is made so much easier for them and for the older members of the family."—Minerva Hunter.

Cheerfulness at Home.

It is quite easy to be a Christian at church and Sunday School, but the real test comes in places where we live, at school, and at home. Some get the wrong idea; that it does not matter what one does at home. Of course, we are polite to strangers, thoughtful to friends; but at home—why it just doesn't count. But home, after all, is first and more important than all the rest. Our fathers and mothers deserve, more than any one else, our thoughtfulness. We seldom know how much they appreciate little, unexpected courtesies. It is a bad habit to expect to receive everything from them, and in return to give nothing, or only a little, and that grudgingly.

One of the things that helps most to make our homes happy is cheerful obedience. Obedience, because we should respect the wishes of those older. We should respect also their judgment. They have lived many more years than we have. They have had experiences not possible for us, and we should know that their love prompts them to ask of us only what is wise.

Our parents are doubly happy if our obedience is both cheerful and prompt. Few things are more disagreeable in the home than ill temper, crossness, and fussing about every little thing.

An ideal home is one in which every one helps. The baby learns to pick up his toys and put them away. Boys and girls learn to hang up their wraps and put away their games, and to keep all their belongings neat and in order. Of course, when we are obedient, we are helping; when we are cheerful, we are helping very much. But there is another way to help, and that is by being thoughtful.

There is love enough in all families. If any member were seriously ill, all the rest would make any sacrifice to care for that member or to help the doctor or nurse. But one need not wait till sickness comes to render some great service in the home to prove one's love for Christ. It can best be done by watching every day for the countless little opportunities for helpfulness and unselfishness.—Selected.

Towards a Rising Sun.

It sees that the enterprise of Christian faith and obedience is moving not toward final gloom but toward unutterable glory; not toward a setting but toward a rising sun. The vision of the New Testament is of unqualified victory of God's universal and uncontested reign; of foes become the footstools of triumphant love, unclouded by disappointment. The faith of the New Testament is that God's resources are not exhausted, and that His plans are not subject to revision; and it declares that the Church, which is the very Body of Jesus Christ, is united to Him to whom the heathen have been given for an inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for a possession; to Him to whom every knee shall yet bow. O my friends, how great is our need today of a renewal of the joyful energies of Christian hope, of the hope that is born and inspired of confidence in Him, and is made radiant by its own instinctive attitude of ready response to His directing example! Of course we are all aware, and possibly none of us has entirely escaped its infection, of the more or less false misconception current within the Churches that, because the religion of Jesus has its objective center in the profoundest event in the world's history, their proper attitude is a reverent looking backward to His earthly days and the days of His early followers. Indeed, it is but bare truth to say that the churches, speaking generally, appear to more than half believe that the tremendous inspirations liberated then have now become more or less exhausted or vitiated, that nothing much can be hoped for now beyond the power respectively to maintain their established institutions; nothing to be hoped for until a new and a startling crisis takes place; and hence the notable absence from the program of the churches of anything demanding high courage or inculcating adventuresomeness or reckless self-sacrifice. For men, even good men, who look for and can see nothing but the brightness which is behind, are apt to see nothing but gloom around and ahead, are apt to see nothing between this present and the furthermost horizon but very dimly-relieved darkness. Of course, they profoundly believe in the God of the Old Testament, and of the days of Christ and of His apostles, but it would almost appear as though they believed that the development of modern life is altogether too much for God, as though things had somehow got out of hand, beyond all likelihood of recovery. Although they would not so express it, they seem to think of God as having somehow exhausted Himself in past manifestations of glory and power, and as now awaiting some final climax or catastrophe of evil before declaring Himself again. To put it to you in the baldest possible way, though I think not in an unjust way, they affirm that while the past came from God, the present is going to the devil. Of course they believed in a God who was impressively active at one time, and as for intelligent cooperation with Him in the work of the Kingdom, well, they extend the vote to their ancestors but they disfranchise their successors.

Of course there is nothing new in all this. Even in the Old Testament days there were pessimistic believers whose faith focussed in the past, who persistently harked back to times of great national deliverence from evil, to the days of their great heroes, as though these were the only days of God. By the same token they miss His immediate presence, His immediate manifestation. But they were not left without witnesses, for from amongst themselves arose prophets, God-chosen, God-taught men, of whom Ecclesiastes was one, who rebuked their exclusive identification of God with history and pointed forward to yet greater things which He was even then preparing and developing among them. They declared the coming of Him whose advent should be as the dawn which pulses every star. They resolutely make ready for Him, and by their insistence on the identity of faith with morality they keep the flame of religion alight.

It was perhaps the chief function of Israel's prophets to wean the people from that ultimate despair and from the sense of ultimate despair which are the inescapable consequences of an exclusively backward look. These prophets were by no means blind to the tragedies and tendencies in their current life. To their faith God was over all, God was working out purposes which as far transcended even the highest experience of His people as the glory of harvest transcends the seed-sowing of springtime, and they realize—oh, would to God that we always did!—they realize that God works just as truly by slow processes as in swift crises. They saw God at work weaving the texture of human destiny, when others could only see the crossed and tangled threads of human failure and disappointment. They could not believe that in an expanding world God alone could be static or that God's power could actually diminish. Their strong confidence was that such a God could not fall below the level of His own achievements; His very nature was the security of their faith, as it is the security of ours. Of course, they were derided, because they not only persisted in their optimism, but they persisted in giving reasons for it; and in due time, in the time already predetermined, the better era which they foretold came, the era of a better sacrifice, a better priesthood, a better covenant; and all men saw then that God, who at sundry times and in divers portions spoke by the prophets, had now spoken by His Son. It was thus that these men who in their own generation sowed the good seed and rejoiced in the hope of the glory of God were vindicated, and it is from their experience that we of this age may still learn a lesson of persistent faith and confident courage.

For our Lord Jesus Christ by His appearing not only justified their hope, but by His own example and teaching confirmed and set His seal upon the forward look which always validates faith. For I would remind you that He, while blessing, teaching, directing, assuring His followers, establishing among them the fellowship of the Kingdom, encouraged them to move forward with Him toward an infinitely more glorious future. It was a large part of the Evangel that as they followed Him the light should become clearer. They should have the light of life, the illumination of an undeceived hope; things should become brighter and better as they went on His ways, from strength to strength, from grace to grace, from glory to glory. Time was their ally, the future was their friend. They should do greater works, they should experience larger alliances, they should discover ampler resources, they should see the ripening of richer harvests than the present, wonderful as it was, could afford. Beyond all that He always made it plain that this should only come about for them by His own vicarious taking of the way of the Garden and the Cross and the Tomb and the Mount of Departure. The certitude of their inspired hope was guaranteed to them by the sacrificial beneficences of His love. Not only did He encourage His followers thus, but let me remind you also that He in Himself exampled the confident hope to which He summoned them; for His own steadfast, persistent, unflagging hopefulness is perhaps the most arresting, the most compelling of all His characteristics. We think of the circumstances in which Jesus Himself sowed the good seed; obscure in origin, of unexalted station, homeless, encompassed about with suspicion which hardened into bitter enmity; without patronage of any kind, accounted mad, exposed to scurrilous slander, the victim of conspiracy in which religious intolerance joined with faithless friendship; His outcast life ending in ignominous death. We stand amazed, as we ever do, when we consider Him. For, in spite of everything, how radiant was His outlook, how sanguine His expectation, how invincible His hope, how dauntless His courage, how inextinguishable was our Lord's faith. He envisages a world overspread with the light of truth, beautified by the moral fertilization of His influence in the midst of its teeming competitive life. He actually sees the Kingdom of God established, a colony of heaven. Its authority supersedes and sanctifies every duty, because it is the birth of life. Its freedom is an increasing reality with the ages. Its seat of government is in the soul of its citizens. Its outcome is a great ingathering from the North and the South, from the East and the West, under the reign of God. Its completion is an impressive intervention, in which He Himself is central.—Rev. J. Stuart Holden, D. D.

"Give a Thought to Africa."

(The author of the following verses, Hosea K. Nyabonga, is a native of Uuganda, East Africa, who is now a student at Clark University, Atlanta, Ga. He is the eldest son of a native king, and consequently is heir apparent to the throne. He is a devout Christian, has a fine mental endowment, and is fitting himself for the largest possible service to his people on his return to Africa.)

Give a thought to Africa!
  Neath the burning sun,
Hosts of weary hearts are there,
  Waiting to be won.
Many idols have they,
  But from swamp and clod
Many a voice is crying out
  For the living God.

Breathe a prayer for Africa:
  "O Thou God of Love,
Send Thy blessings on the tribes,
  From Thy Home above."
Swarthy lips when moved by grace
  Can most sweetly sing,
Pray that Africa's heart may be Loyal to our King.

Give your love to Africa!
  There our brothers call.
Bring release from slavery,
  Break sin's bitter thrall.
White shall love the black man,
  Each forget the past;
In the Father's House above,
  All will meet at last.

The Tree and Cloud.

George Nutt.

A Cross of Earth and Heaven I saw,
As Eve declined.
Before me rose a slender shaft
Of green outlined
Against the golden glow of Eve,
That sifting through,
Edged leaves with glory pulsing slow,
As living, too.
Athwart the springing tree, a cloud
With level line
Is tenuous drawn, in equal arms—
A Cross Divine!

Toward Northern snows of purity
One arm is guide—
And one looks South, where light and warmth
Of Love abide;
While straight between, from Earth to Heaven,
Life's Tree uprears;
Its crown of growth seeks life, where high,
Its Sun appears.
Our Cross of Pain comes but to guide
Where Love is all,
That pure, we see Him who for aye
Shall us enthrall!

Taking Out What We Put In.

I have in my hand an empty tin box I open the box and put into it this hard rock that you see. I put into it this trash—these scraps of paper—and this key, this piece of blank paper, this piece of paper with the splotches all over it, this flower, this slip containing a poem, these pieces of money, this piece of jewelry, this little piece of clay (dirt)—and finally this small slip of paper containing some writing. I now shut the box. You all saw what went into it.

No, I am not trying any tricks of magic. But I am giving you a lesson on taking out and putting in. Now, what can I take out of this box? Exactly the things I put in, you answer, Yes, I can take out just what I put in. First, I will take out his little slip of paper, and this gives me my text, "A good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth good things; and an evil man out of the evil treasure bringeth forth evil things". Those are the words of the best man who ever lived on this earth and are found in Matthew 12:35. Those are the words written on this small piece of paper.

The next thing I shall take out is this piece of blank paper. God gave us a clean life to start with—let us do our best to keep it clean. Then here is another piece of paper, exactly the same size and kind—but look at it! It is covered with blots and splotches! Some one has made a mess of it! Well, that is the way some people do in life. Do not do as they do!

Here are the scraps and bits of paper that I put in—just trash. But I could not get them out if I had not put them into the box! Lots of people, big and little folk, too, just fill their minds with pure trash. What a pity. They put trashy stories and trashy stuff of all kinds in their minds—and all they can think about is the trivial and the trashy and the worthless! Do not fill your minds with trash, whatever you do!

Well, here is a flower, just a little bud plucked from a beautiful hyacinth. The great prophet Mohammed is said to have remarked, "If I had two loaves of bread, I would sell one and buy white hyacinths on which to feed my soul". Children, fill your minds with things that are pretty and beautiful. Have flowers in the house and in the yard and in the garden—and by all means, have your mind full of the beautiful—beautiful hopes and beautiful ideas and beautiful thoughts.

And here is a clipping. It is a beautiful poem. We should memorize more of the world's great poetry. I could not get this particular poem out of my head, because I have never put it in my head. I had to get it out of the box, because that is where I put it! You get out of your mind and your heart and your life the things that you put in! The good man gets out good treasures, because he puts in good thoughts and good purposes and good intentions; while the evil man gets out evil things, because those are the things he put into his memory and into his thoughts and into his life.

And here is some money. Some people never think about anything but money! And here is a piece of jewelry. People spend billions every year for jewelry. Now money and jewelry are all right, in moderation—but let's not make them the biggest things in life! Now I have that hard rock that I put in. It represents the hard problems about the mysteries of life that some people are always wrestling with. Don't fill your mind with these puzzles and problems, knotty and hard; but fill your mind with the beautiful, with love and loving thoughts and faith and hope. This is a piece of clay, just a bit of common dirt; see how it crumbles. Do not let stuff like this get into your life. Keep the dirt out of your hearts and minds.

You have seen me put these things into the box and you have seen me take them out. Be careful what you put into your life, your heart, and your mind.—Dr. T. F. Opie, in The Homiletic Review.

Mary Ellen's Victory.

Mary Ellen was frowning as she walked slowly home from school. She was alone. She usually walked home alone. She did not seem to have any girl friends. And no girl ever wanted them more than she.

Mary Ellen prided herself on her sharp tongue. "No one can ever get the best of me," she boasted to herself. "I can always stand up for my rights."

Why, just now she had let Jane Steward know that she could not boss her. She and Jane shared the same locker at school. While getting their coats out Jane had said, "Oh, but this locker need a house-cleaning".

And Mary Ellen had answered right back, "Well, if it does, why don't you clean it? I am not going to do it".

"I thought we could do it together," Jane answered back gently. "I—" She did not finish, for a group of girls stopped and called for Jane to join them. They had not looked at Mary Ellen—not even Jean Andrews.

And that was why Mary Ellen was frowning as she walked home from school, because Jean no longer waited to walk home with her. Jean lived next door to her. Mary Ellen liked Jean better than any other girl. She was a quiet girl, but everybody seemed to like her.

"I wonder who turned her against me," thought Mary Ellen. "I am going to ask her."

She went over to see Jean right after supper. Jean was in the kitchen, washing dishes and humming softly.

Mary Ellen sat perfectly still, then said, "I thought you had a maid," she said, seating herself in a chair.

"We have," returned Jean, "but she wanted to go to visit a friend, so I told her I would wash the dishes."

"Well, I wouldn't do it," answered Mary Ellen promptly. "That is her work, what she is paid for."

Jean looked at her in surprise. "Why, Katy does all kinds of niece things for me. And tomorrow she will fix me something special to eat or press some of my clothes."

Mary Ellen did not answer. She just sat and watched Jean cleaning the sink. Jean was smiling while she cleaned the sink.

"What are you smiling about?" asked Mary Ellen curiously.

"I guess I feel smily," laughed Jean. "Katy will be pleased if the sink looks nice. And I will be pleased because she is pleased."

"Jean," said Mary Ellen abruptly, "I came over to find out why you are mad at me?"

"Mad at you?" Jean looked amazed. "I am not mad at you."

"Then, why do you avoid me?"

Jean shook out her dishcloth carefully. She gave the sink an extra polish. "I believe I have been avoiding you," she said. "But I did it unconsciously."

"But why avoid me?" she cried. "I won't eat you."

"I avoid you because you say things just like that last remark," returned Jean. "They are horrid."

Mary Ellen sat perfectly still, then said, "I never let other girls run over me."

"Who wants to run over you?" asked Jean. "I am sure I do not. And I am sure the other girls feel the same way. They want to be nice to you, but you won't let them. You drive them away with your sharp tongue."

"I want friends and I never have any," confessed Mary Ellen.

"We have to be pleasant to have friends," answered Jean. "No one wants to bother with people who are not."

"Why, Jean," cried Mary Ellen, "I never thought of that—that I was not pleasant."

Mary Ellen went home thoughtfully. "I am going to be pleasant," she thought. "I want friends."

The next day she tried not to say sharp things. It was hard not to sometimes. "They just want to pop out," she told herself. But the more she tried to repress them the easier it became for her to be pleasant and friendly.

It was when she suggested to Jane, in a new, pleasant way, that they clean their locker together, that she began to see results, for Jane smiled at her in a friendly fashion and said she would be glad to do it any time.

They cleaned the locker out the next afternoon. They were laughing together when a group of girls stopped beside them. "Some mess," said one of the girls.

And Mary Ellen started to say, "What difference does it make to you?" she was able to hold back the words and laugh with Jane.

This time the girls invited Mary Ellen as well as Jane to go with them down to the gymnasium to watch a game of basket ball.

Jean caught her arm as they were going down the stairs. "You are doing well," she whispered. "And you have the nicest smile. It makes you look friendly."

Mary Ellen looked at Jean with happy eyes. "I try so hard," she whispered. "And the girls are all beginning to see that I am trying to be pleasant. And it makes a big difference."—Girls' World.

The Manger.

"I've built a little manger
Within my heart tonight
To welcome in the Stranger,
The Lord of Love and Right.
I've built a manger lowly
Where He may come and rest,
And here the Infant Holy
Shall be my welcome Guest.

"For many a door has turned Him
Into the evening gloom,
And many a voice has spurned Him,
Saying, 'No room! No room!'
I've made a little manger
Because I have no more.
Come in, Thou Blessed Stranger, Possess it evermore."

—C. E. Flynn.

An Unclouded Soul.

Tom Eldridge was out of sorts with the whole world and looked it this gorgeous July morning as he walked along a beautiful country lane scowling at the road before him, and viciously snapping off with his stick the heads of the gay little daisies that were nodding at him along his path.

"Stuck away in this awful hole all summer when we might just as well have been at the shore with the gang," he muttered to himself.

The Eldridges had decided to spend their month's vacation this year at Mrs. Eldridge's fathers' farm in the country instead of going to the hotel at the beach where they had been for several summers. They hadn't liked the crowd of young folks that the children had been going with since they entered high school, and had come back to the farm, hoping to show the twins that there was real beauty in life which they were missing in their mad rush after what they called a good time.

Ray loved it all right, but Tom was perfectly miserable, missing his friends and being apparently unable to see any joy in the happy life about him on his grandparents' great farm.

This morning he had gone off by himself to grouch, because he really was ashamed to do it in front of his happy family and grand-dad and granny, who were so overjoyed at having their loved ones with them.

As Tom turned around a curve in road he came directly upon an old gentleman sitting before an easel. His curiosity got the better of him and he stepped up to look at the canvas, but it was bare, the picture hadn't yet been begun. The interesting old man was just squeezing the paints on to his palette.

"Good morning, sir," Tom said politely, for he hoped above everything in the world to be a painter some day. He had already done some very clever things in school which his drawing teacher had praised. His one idea was to get to Paris. He felt that that was the only place where one could learn to become a great artist.

The old man turned toward him cordially. "Morning, my boy. Did you ever see a lovelier morning in all your young life?" and he squeezed a long sky-blue worm along the edge of his palette.

"Oh, I don't know," Tom answered, rather patronizingly. "The country doesn't interest me. I don't see much in it."

"Don't see much in the country!" the old man gasped. "Suppose you come back here tomorrow morning around this time and see what I see in the country," and he turned back to his canvas as though the interview was ended.

That noon Tom found his family around the dinner table very much thrilled over the fact that a famous painter was in the neighborhood. And Tom was thrilled, too, when he heard it, and very much embarrassed at the way he had behaved when he had met him. He could think of nothing else all the rest of the day but the invitation he had received to come back. The next morning found him hastening down the lane toward the curve where he had talked to the great man the day before.

When he found him he was painting. He said nothing at first, then pointing to the picture on which he was working he said reverently, "There, my son, is what I am privileged to see in the country". Tom looked down on the canvas and saw spread out on it the landscape which was before them, the blue sky, the tiny hill, with the low apple tree on its side, the brook and the field of daisies. Tom had an eye for the beau-

CHRISTMAS Money for You

Search Your Attic for Fortunes in Old Envelopes.

Among the old letters of many families are hundreds of very rare stamps and envelopes. Many have been found and sold for fortunes. Single envelopes have been sold for as high as $6,000, and many have brought upwards of $100 each. It sounds "fishy", but it's true. They are valuable because they are rare. And they are rare, not because there are only a few, but simply because most of them have remained stored away and forgotten, in old trunks, family chests and closets.

Make a thorough search through your attic or store room for such old letters—anything mailed from 1845 to 1865. Fortunes in rare stamps have been found in old trunks which no one ever dreamed contained anything of value. Keep the letters if you wish, but send the envelopes to Mr. Harold C. Brooks, Box 257, Marshall, Michigan, and he will immediately write you, stating their value. In sending them to him you are not obliged to sell unless his offer meets with your approval. Anything not purchased he will return in good order. Mr. Brooks, who is mayor of his city, is a private collector and has paid thousands of dollars for old envelopes bearing stamps. Although the rare issues are especially desired, he also buys many of the commoner kinds. Many people in this way are getting Christmas money with very little trouble and no expense.

The advertising manager of Southern Churchman has known Mr. Brooks for many years, and you may place fullest confidence in his integrity. On receipt of envelopes he will examine them and report promptly their value. If they are not purchased, he guarantees to return them in good order.

Mr Brooks states that there are so many different stamps which are similar in appearance he cannot quote values from written descriptions, but must see the envelopes. Furthermore, he is not interested in buying loose stamps or stamp collections, but only the old envelopes bearing postage; so do not cut the stamps from the envelopes. It is not necessary to write dates on envelopes, as Mr. Brooks is fully acquainted with all issues, even though the postmark shows no year date. Those especially wanted are United States issues, but he also buys Confederate, Canadian, Hawaiian, and certain foreign stamps, provided they are on the original envelopes and mailed not later than 1865.

If envelopes are sent in a bunch they should be carefully packed in a cardboard box to protect them from damage while in the mails. If you have reason to believe your envelopes are of special value send them by registered or insured mail. If you have no old letters written during or before the Civil War, show this notice to your friends—especially those whose families have lived in the same home for several generations. Many old families, old banks and law firms still have stored away hundreds of letters, waiting to be burned or sold for large sums. Before destroying such envelopes or folded letters investigate their value. Mr. Brooks' address is as follows:

HAROLD C. BROOKS,
Box 257, Marshall, Mich.

tiful, and had he not been so peevish at having to come to the country instead of to the gay resort where his pals were, he would have seen the picture himself without having to have it put on canvas for him.

"Oh, sir," he asked, "do you think I will ever be able to do anything like that if I work hard? I'm not afraid of work."

"Let me tell you something that a very famous painter once told a pupil of his, my boy. 'Young man,' he said, 'if you would succeed as an artist, you must keep yourself from whatever tends to injure your work, for nature does not reveal hersel fto a clouded soul.'"

"That's true enough, sir, isn't it?" Tom said eagerly. "You know, yesterday I was angry because I didn't want to be here in this beautiful place, and I didn't see a thing in it. My soul was clouded, I guess."

The old man looked interested. "Sit down, lad, and let's have a chat."

That noon Tom announced to his family that the famous artist was going to let him sketch with him every day that he wished to, and that he was going to send home for his paint box at once.

The month in the country went too quickly for Tom, and when he returned to school that fall he seemed to have lost all interest in the crowd that his family did not approve of. Of course he never mentioned it to a person, boys do not talk of that sort of thing, but he was trying to keen an unclouded soul.—Youths' World.

Crystalized Memories

"Man is of few days. He cometh forth as a flower, and is cut down; he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not."

SUCH quotations constantly remind us of the short duration of life. But the memories of our loved ones who have passed on will continue to live in our hearts.

The monuments we select to maintain these memories, should be cut from a stone which will properly carry to many generations to come the messages entrusted to them. This means stone of durability, beauty, contrast and strength. Granite is the only stone which meets such requirements and many granites fail.

Winnsboro Blue Granite

"The Silk of the Trade" stands preeminently the most lasting, the most beautiful, and inscriptions on it the most legible.

Be sure that you get the genuine Winnsboro Blue Granite. Like other high quality materials, there are many inferior substitutes that resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty.

Write for Free descriptive literature, also for facsimile reproduction of a polished sample of Winnsboro Blue Granite that you may see its beauty. Deaths

MISS HATTIE M. FITZHUGH.
At the Louise Home, Washington, D. C., very early in the morning of November 3, 1927, her eighty-seventh birthday, the beautiful spirit of MISS HATTIE M. FITZHUGH entered into eternal rest. She was the daughter of Mary Mildred and Augustine Washington Fitzhugh, of King George county, Virginia, where she spent her early life, later teaching for many years in Alexandria, Va. For thirty years past she lived in Washington, D. C. A fall more than a year ago resulted in a broken hip, followed by long illness, borne with Christian fortitude and gentle patience.

During her life in Washington she was a faithful member of the P. E. Church of the Epihpany, whose rector, Rev. Z. deB. Phillips, D. D., conducted the funeral services at Louise Home Wednesday, November 10, 10:30 A. M. Interment at Glenwood Cemetery.

"We would not call her back, but whisper,
O Lord, Thy will be done.'

A. B. J.

his lay-reader, Mr. Disney, were Dr. Kinsolving, the rector of the mother parish; Bishop Coadjutor Helfenstein, the Rev. Benjamin H. Lovett, Mr. John M. Glenn of New York, Mr. Leigh Bonsal and Miss Elizabeth Gilman, all of whom made addresses. A purse of $500 was presented Mr. Staples from the Chapel congregation, and Mr. Bonsal for the vestry of St. Paul's, gave him a handsome pitcher and base.

The work at St. Paul's Chapel, the largest of its kind in the entire South, is the outgrowth of an enterprise begun thirty-five years ago by a group of men and women in St. Paul's Parish: Mr. Jeffrey R. Brackett, Mr. John M. Glenn, the Rev. Charles A. Jessup, Dr. C. C. Shippen, Mr. Edgar Allan Poe, Miss Elizabeth Gilman, Miss Margaretta Poe and Miss Fanny Wyatt. When the present rector came to St. Paul's in 1906, the work was housed in a small building on Columbia Avenue, upon which there was a considerable debt. A few years later a consolidation was effected with the Henshaw Memorial Church, a large coal-yard adjacent to the church was purchased, and one of the best parish houses in Baltimore erected.

Twenty years ago the congregation there raised $1,200 for all objects; last year they gave more than $8,000. The mother church has invested in the work more than $125,000, and the only indebtedness remaining upon the great plant is a mortgage of $16,000, which is steadily being extinguished. During the twenty-five years there have been 1,626 baptisms, 1,095 confirmations, 395 marriages, 926 burials.

At the commemoration exercises the rector of St. Paul's and others paid high tributes to Mr. Staples' energy and devotion, and especially to the great work he accomplished among children and adolescents.

Personal Notes

ORDINATIONS.

In All Saints' Church, Chicago, on All Saints' Day the Rt. Rev. C. P. Anderson, D. D., Bishop of Chicago, advanced the Rev. William Tullberg to the priesthood.

The rector of the parish, the Rev. F. E. Bernard, presented the candidate; the rector of Holy Cross Immanuel, Chicago, the Rev. T. N. Harrowell, read the litany; and Bishop Anderson preached the sermon.

Mr. Tullberg will continue his work at St. Ansgarius Swedish Mission, Chicago, where he served his diaconate.

On November 27, in Grace Church, Washington, the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., ordained to the priesthood the Rev. M. Mills Perkins. As a deacon Mr. Perkins was called to the rectorship of Grace Church, Washington. Mr. Perkins is also assisting the Bishop with the work of his office.

How Do You Read the Bible?

—Open it at random and read? Read it by books? Start at Genesis and read through to Revelation? Or follow the Lectionary or some plan of selected passages?

To find new treasure, whole vistas of truth, inspiration and help, try the experiment in 1928 of using

The Churchman's Calendar OF DAILY BIBLE READINGS

Thousands of Church people know it. Over a hundred thousand copies of the 1927 edition were ordered. Other thousands of Church people will find it equally helpful in gaining Bible knowledge.

This year the daily readings are supplemented by more extended comment than heretofore. Enough to supply what most readers need; not enough to require more time than most readers can give. This new treatment doubles the size of the booklet, 64 pages instead of 32, and of course increases the price. But price is hardly a consideration. It is within the reach of everyone.

The organizations and co-operating agencies of the Church are all working for systematic Bible reading as the means of spiritual growth. The Kalendar may be obtained through the Woman's Auxiliary, the Girl's Friendly Society, the Daughters of the King, the Commission on Evangelism and the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, as well as from The Book Store, Church Missions House, 231 Fourth Avenue, New York.

Order your copy now! Recommend it to your friends! Use it as a gift!

10 cents per copy, $7.50 per hundred.

"IN HOC SIGNO VINCES"

The Revelation of the Bible is Complete :: Its Doctrines are Immutable :: Its Truth is Invincible :: And its Authority is Absolute :: :: ::

Professor Dana's famous words to a graduating class in Yale are worthy of remembrance: "Young men, as you go out into the world to face scientific problems, remember that I, an old man who has known only science all my life long, say to you that there is NOTHING TRUER IN ALL THE UNIVERSE THAN THE SCIENTIFIC STATEMENTS CONTAINED IN THE WORD OF GOD." He probably had in his mind such passages as Gen. 1:1-3, with the five ultimate categories of space, time, matter, motion, force, or the extraordinary harmony between Genesis and the nineteenth century science of geology. These words, and the statement of Sir John Herschel, "All human discoveries seem to be made only for the PURPOSE OF CONFIRMING MORE STRONGLY THE TRUTHS THAT HAVE COME FROM ON HIGH AND ARE CONTAINED IN THE SACRED WRITINGS," seem like an echo of Ps. 119:160.—Dr. Dyson Hague.

Better Sunday Schools

FIND a church without a live and growing Sunday-school, and you have found a church that is missing one of its greatest opportunities, the salvation and training of the next generation. One of the surest signs of a church that is standing still, or actually declining, is a Sunday-school that is steadily growing smaller. Often, in such a case, it seems difficult to stem the tide, and many who have the welfare of their Sunday-schools at heart have been perplexed, when, seemingly, all the effort to make the programs attractive and helpful meets with failure. As they look at other schools, it appears, sometimes as though much more is accomplished with less effort. The secret may not always be equipment, and yet in every case it will be worth while to consider carefully the distinct advantages that may be gained, and the labor and time in routine things that may be saved for more important duties, through the use of carefully chosen equipment and accessories.

Many will recall some of the difficulties they had, as children, in visualizing the great march of the children of Israel through the wilderness, or other well-known Bible stories. Think what it would have meant to have had beautiful and accurate pictures of the country and the people to accompany the study of the Word. More and more those engaged in teaching children are realizing the importance of the eyegate in reaching the child's mind, and that Sunday-school is wise that makes use of the stereopticon and Bible motion pictures to drive home the great truths of the Word. There are thousands of views for stereopticons dealing with Bible subjects, and large libraries of carefully selected scenic motion picture films, suitable for church use, are available at a cost that is not beyond the average Sunday-school.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

In this world there are many echoes, but few voices.—Tennyson.

Walking with God will always lead you toward man.

If we are going to sit together in heavenly places, we had better begin to stand together in the earthly ones.

If we are resting on the best formulas that were ever handed down; or own the best book that was ever written by God, and not the law of God Himself, our foundation will crumble under our feet.

The question which should be of fundamental interest to Christians in America," he says, "is one that concerns, not the state of our property or the immediate status of our missionaries, but the state of Christianity—which is, I am convinced, a different thing."

Let us not be ashamed to be friendly or to show
Any friendly feeling we may have.
Let us be the first to give a friendly sign, to nod first,
Smile first, speak first, give first, and if such a
Thing is necessary, forgive first, and forget first.

"You have seen a ship out on the bay, swinging with the tide, and seeming as if it would follow it; and yet it cannot, for down beneath the water it is anchored. So many a soul sways toward Heaven, but cannot ascend thither, because it is anchored to some secret sin."

If you would pray,
Then stay
Awhile upon your knees, lest your neglect
And haste show disrespect Unto the "King of kings and Lord of lords".
Sometimes no words
Are needed; but to wait
In silence, prospers most at Heav'n's gate.

—William Olney.

Here is the beauty and glory of Christ, as a Redeemer and Saviour of lost man, that He goes before, always before, and never behind His flock. The works of love that He requires from us in words, are preceded and illustrated by real deeds of love to which He gave us all His mighty powers from day to day. He bore the Cross Himself that He asks us to take up and bear after Him. In all which He is our Shepherd, calling, but never driving, bearing all the losses He calls us to bear; meeting all the dangers, suffering all the cruelties and pains which it is given us to suffer, and drawing us to follow where He leads.—Horace Bushnell.

WASTE

Misers and spendthrifts are the most wasteful of all people. The miser using life to hoard money and the spendthrift squandering money, are equally guilty of gross, shameful, atrocious waste. There is grim humor in the fact that while they waste years and happiness and hope, they are made useful against their will and intent. The one must leave his treasure to be distributed somehow and to do good for somebody. The other, as he scatters what he has inherited or acquired, must send part of it, at least, to some who need it and to whom it is real benefit. Both starve and shrivel their souls, one in the freezing air of borrowed penury and self-deprivation, the other in the hot glare of self-indulgence. They are alike mastered and driven by selfishness, working in directions precisely opposite. Shivering fear of losing and ultimate actual destitution of purse, friends, health and self-respect carry punishment and misery, bitterness and torture falling on both.

These examples are obvious and the dullest and most careless of us may learn from them that selfishness causes more waste of better and more precious things than any other human vice or passion and that all excess and extremes involve waste. Even piety may be perverted to wastefulness. Hermits who fled from contact with mankind to avoid contamination and temptation were craven deserters on the field of battle, even in ecstacies of adoration concentrating for the saving of their own souls' zeal and fire, which might have saved many souls. Shunning the touch of the sinful and suffering, they gave no healing or cleansing influence, no joy to banish anguish or light and vision to replace darkness and groping.

As with miser and spendthrift and hermit, many other contrasting and contrary courses of life lead to the same dark and fatal consequences. Those who use time and faculties chasing pleasure and exalting frivolities and those who deny themselves the proper and wholesome recreations and enjoyments of life for attainment of some selfish purpose or ambition are alike wasters. The unfortunates who spend means, ingenuity, patience, heartache, striving to climb to prominence and high place in society and the other unfortunates who saturate themselves with cynicism, misanthropy and pessimism and employ tongue and pen snarling at success and sneering at all that is, from the ordinances of the Creator to the local government and the new generations and customs, all waste recklessly and fearfully.

The vast majority of us, however, are not of any of these conspicuous extremes. We are commonplace, every-day, decent, decently well behaved citizens. Yet it behooves all of us to investigate the subject of waste in our own individual cases. Those of us who would look forward with confidence must sometimes look backward along the paths on which we have come and consider with courageous care and thoroughness what and where we have wasted and are wasting and what waste we may stop.

Many large enterprises and establishments employ now efficiency experts whose work is to find and prevent leaks and waste. No other business has so many ramifications and complications as this intricate business of being and doing, even for the simplest and narrowest lives. Our bodies are the most marvelous of all machines. We waste and misuse them cruelly. With them kindly nature acts for us as efficiency experts, giving us reminders and warnings, and the doctors are ready with repair kits and schedules of economies and rebuilding. For the other parts and elements of the human creature there is a multitude of inclinations, impulses, instincts, passions, temptations, opportunities, over which we must watch for ourselves. We are given reason and the privilege of self-inspection and analysis, which no other animal has, and, justly, are held responsible for results and output and the one Helper to whom we must appeal is not of this world. We are required to use our own ceaseless vigilance. When we fail to use it, the fault is with us.

We waste our griefs and defeats, which by processes of prayer and faith and earnest striving we can sweeten to blessings. "Misfortune nobly borne becomes good fortune." Rather than soothe the sting of them with resignation and draw from them the fragrance and beauty of loving sympathy with all affliction, too many of us distil from them poison of morbid repining, agonizing resentment, sullen despair. We waste our joys and successes for contentment and peace by neglecting to realize them and be grateful for them, incurring the bitterness of reflection, in after days, that we were happy and refused to comprehend our own happiness. Looking back along the straightest and most even path along which we have come, we must be solemnly humiliated by the waste we will detect. Time, which we might have used for betterment of ourselves and others; labor of body and mind for follies, or worse, which we could have applied to enduring good; influence, power, which we might have made felt strongly for the right, withheld or degraded to service of wrong; opportunity to give comfort, succor, aid, where they were sorely needed, nelgected, disregarded or callously denied. The richer and stronger we are, the wider our circles of contact and action, the more we have wasted, the heavier our liabilities for the great final accounting. Yet the poorest and weakest of us may be wasteful as the wildest and vainest spendthrift, may discover on honest introspection where we have thrown away the golden gift of ability to alleviate a neighbor's distress, to plant grateful and gracious memories of us in hearts, to turn to safe and upward ways feet hastening toward danger, to rebuke and halt evil, to give some courage and strength to the weak and struggling.

We may detest and scorn the miser who hoards his store and will share none of it with any, laugh contemptuously at the spendthrift who scatters what he has and sinks to want. They are victims of the same consuming demon of selfishness. But the miser must leave his gains to be divided and the spendthrift's ill-spent wealth remains, perhaps for usefulness. Those who from negligence fail to seek earnestly what good we may do and to do it as we can, will leave only waste, will go forth leaving the world no better for their stay in it, death for them closing a forlorn story of empty, barren years.

One of the best and brightest hopes and promises we have for the future is in the many score thousand Boy Scouts, trained to survey each night the little way from waking to bed time to know if the Scout obligation to do at least one kindness daily has been fulfilled. This is not a new thought or plan. Through more than a century the couplet of a forgotten rhymster has been familiar:

"Count that day lost whose low, descending sun Views from thy hand no worthy action done."

The Boy Scouts, organized in England nineteen years ago, and the unknown American writing at the middle of the Eighteenth Century express the same idea of the highest efficiency for humanity and avoidance of waste. Is it not dolefully true that some of us of mature age and faculties may look sadly back on many days and find in them only waste? Are there not unhappy, remorseful memories of wasted opportunities when, with kindly word or smile or courtesy, with gift we could have spared or evidence of friendly interest, we might have done much for the least of these our brethren, and His brethren, in varying circumstances of stress, and we did it not? If it be so, surely it is the manly and womanly part not to waste our retrospections in unfruitful remorse, but to gather from them incentive and inspiration to new vigilance to heal and comfort and help as we may, that there shall be no hearts bruised nor tears drawn by our indifference or harshness to testify fearfully against us.

A DISMAYING ANNOUNCEMENT

Is there not cause, in the paragraphs below, taken from a New York newspaper, for dismay and fear, for mournful reflections on the decadence and demoralization of the time and spread of the crime wave and for apprehension that atheism and irreligion are increasing and that the Church is threatened?

"DEISM IN NEW YORK."

"November, 1827.

"It is perhaps not generally known that a regularly organized club is in existence in this city called The Free Press Association. One dollar is entrance money and twenty-five cents a month makes a member. The funds are applied to the support of a free press (as they term it) to the purchase of books, etc., etc. They have under their direction a weekly paper with about six hundred subscribers. It contains, among other things, most of the lectures that are delivered weekly before this club.

"On the Sabbath, at four o'clock P. M., they assemble in a spacious room, two to three hundred in number, including transient visitors. The meeting is opened by an ode, sung by the club, with the assistance of a few females who have sufficiently divested themselves of the fear of God to join in such a circle. This is followed by written lectures, successively delivered by two or three individuals, and then closed by another ode, to the praise of nature."

These paragraphs, dear and estimable, even if occasionally somewhat absurd, pessimistic brother, are from the New York Observer of November 10, 1827, a little more than a hundred years ago. We gather that the Free Press Association was fashioned on the lines of the Civil Liberties Union and Association for Advancement of Atheism, both also of New York, of the year 1927. These diligently thrust themselves into the newspapers on every possible occasion as champions of every alien or citizen anarchist, revolutionist and foe of religion, who falls under ban of the law.

In proportion to population of city and country, the Free Press Association of 1827 seems to have been stronger in numbers and more generous in outlay than the Civil Liberties Union and the Atheists of now. Yet the Association is dead and forgot, long ago, known of only in rotting files of dead newspapers. And the Church the Association was to destroy is here, stronger and more of a power than ever, pessimist brother, with new churches building and new congregations developing every day and everywhere.

RELIGIOUS INTOLERANCE

John L. Williams

INTOLERANCE is one thing; an unwavering and inflexible and uncompromising devotion to truth and duty is another. One assumes control of other people; the other has the care of conscience and self-respect and its own convictions. Intolerance means impatience and tyranny towards those who will not agree with us or submit to or acquiesce in our dicta. The other spirit is absolute loyalty to truth and right, utter self-sacrifice to duty.

The Supreme Being is tolerant but uncompromising. Forbearance and mercy characterize His rule; but He has no compromise with sin. He is merciful and gracious, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin; but He will by no means clear the guilty. His divine standard is absolute goodness, perfect holiness and purity and righteousness. He is without variableness or shadow of turning—entirely faithful. The Saviour, on earth, was tolerant but uncompromising. The robe of His righteousness was without a flaw or stain or defect, typified by fine linen, pure and white. For its attainment nothing short of entire submission and self-sacrifice was and is required. He is all mercy and compassion; but there is not a suggestion of wavering or compromise about Him. The prince of this world hath nothing in Him. The requirements for the kingdom of heaven are the simplicity and purity of a child's heart, but the righteousness of a saint. How they are to be attained, and on what terms mercy and forgiveness for defects and sins are to be had, is the great business of the Gospel.

Irreligious and religious intolerance, when men were tortured or burnt at the stake for their convictions, is a thing of the past. A steadfast spirit in questions of duty and obedience to the infinitely pure and holy God is the highest heroism and glory of this age. Intolerance that would compel the whole world up to a standard either of doctrine or discipline—the social regulator—is less and less tolerated nowadays. The kingdom of heaven within, is the idea growing more and more in favor; rigorous and habitual self-denial and unflinching self-government, and no fellowship with vice, are the world's exactions of every little dominion that lifts up the standard of Christianity.

The Church of Christ is a great, divine, acknowledged reality. It is not a religion: it is the Light of the world. And the earth no more certainly acknowledges the risen sun than the whole face and soul of humanity have acknowledged and do acknowledge and respond to the light of the Sun of Righteousness, risen with healing in His wings. We may as well talk of the sun and moon and stars, of air and life, of food and drink, of the souls of men, as matters of opinion, as call the Christian religion by that name. It does not rest on reason or grow out of syllogisms; it is a revelation, it presents itself to the famishing soul of humanity, and the soul seizes it as its life and light. It runs about from one end of heaven to the other, and nothing can resist its light and heat. It is not intolerant, but overwhelming. Darkness flies before it. Men are ashamed of their follies and vain imaginations, and cast their idols to the moles and bats in its presence. It is not a matter of opinion. It does not contend with idols, false doctrine, and imaginations and high thoughts that exalt themselves against a knowledge of God; but it stands and speaks in the strength of the Lord and in the majesty of the Lord its God. In the light of heaven, it commands submission to its Sovereign King. This is the Invisible Church—the Bride of Christ—fair, clear, terrible and irresistible. This is made up of all souls knit together in one communion and fellowship, having one Lord, one faith, and one baptism, one God and Father of all—all denominations, all who worship the Saviour in spirit and in truth; precisely as one government embraces all loyal individuals, families and communities, though differing in character, taste, and modes of thought. The Bride, the Church of Christ, is one—perfect and peerless—made up of every creature's best; and yet while one body, having many members, and every member its own office. Its glory comes of its varieties. The pure white light of heaven is made up of divers prismatic colors. The floating idea now abroad of one uniform Church, with all peculiarities and individualities and class characteristics and privileges eliminated—only I and mine saved, and on top—is a popular, passing sensation. The four-and-twenty elders must still be ideal, and the Church be one only in the unity of the Spirit and the knowledge of the Son of God. The distinctness of denominations is the life and safety of the Church. Each has its special duty, trust and responsibility for the perfection of the whole. Every denomination and community has a right to order its own system of doctrine, discipline and worship, according to its best ideas of truth, of safety, and of instruction, precisely as every family has a right to order its household. If any individual objects, he has no right to complain of his communion as intolerant. He is free to withdraw and set up for himself, and worship and serve God as he believes to be right; he has no right to enjoy privileges without obeying conditions. Let him part in peace. But virtue can have no tolerance for vice, nor Christ for Belial; nor Truth for Falsehood. There is no communion with opposites.

The world is in a transition state—a state of moral and intellectual ferment and change. Everything is transforming, growing and maturing, adjusting and advancing towards perfection. And everything, in and out of the Church invisible, is short of what it ought to be, and has its deficiencies and faults as well as its excellences.

The general world of popular science, philosophy, wealth and fashion and rowdyism, is a community which is known as the world. It claims a dominion of its own, endowed with rights that are asserted to be native and inalienable: that are to be exercised in their own light, and acknowledges no allegiance but to ideal reason—the work of the hands of the logical craftsman. They claim the right to go to the devil their own way. This power, and those that range themselves in one way or another on its side, contend with the Church. They avow no knowledge of the essential life of the Church and its sacred and divine being. They are agnostic. They claim to judge it by its fruits—what they hear and see; the objects of their senses. They take the Church for all the worldliness that they recognize in it, the visible Church for all the frailties of humanity that are manifest in it. And they call these outward things Christianity and the Church, find that aspect of it little better than worldliness, and indict it for pharisaism and hypocrisy. And they have a kind of triumph, because spurious Christianity is a poor failing thing. And worldliness and pride and avarice cannot be Christianity. Nor can they occupy the same earthly tabernacle with the Spirit of Christ. The rich and great are discredited as custodians of divine truth. Indeed, true Christianity, that knows no compromise with falsehood or error or pride or vice, and is yet gentle towards all, bearing, trusting, enduring all things, does not strive—uses no force or compulsion. It overcomes evil with good; it is the seasoner and sanctifier of the world; and it overcomes all obstacles by its gentle operations, like the light and heat of the sun, the dews and frosts, that irresistibly accomplish the will of God, and yet are not intolerant. Its only weapon is the Sword of the Spirit—the Word of God.

THE SURRENDERED LIFE---IN CHRIST

Conducted by the Reverend Frank Cox

THE CHRIST LIFE—STUDIES IN EPHESIANS.

By the Rev. Duncan Thomas.

IN Ephesians we see that God expects the Church to be seen as the Body of Christ. Naturally each member must possess the life of the Body. We, therefore, will consider the epistle from the individual more than the corporate point of view. Let us bear in mind that God's expectation is never a tantalizing and unattainable ideal, but a full possibility, a norm for whose attainment by each child of His, God has made complete provision. In this epistle even the so frequently overlooked introduction (1: 1, 2) is full of richest material regarding the Christ-life, from the Writer, the Readers, the Greeting.

I. The Writer—the Man, His Master, Mission and Motive.

1. The Man. The first word furnishes a hint as to a basic condition of the Christ-life. Saul, the brilliant, sufficient young Jewish leader, meets Christ face to face on the road. He surrenders his life in exchange for that of Christ. Henceforth, "it is no longer I that live, but Christ liveth in me". And Saul takes a new name to indicate the change—"Paulus", "little", insignificant. He had been great He became nothing—that Christ might be all.

2. His Master. "Paul, an Apostle of Christ Jesus", that is, not his own, but belonging to Christ. Before: "I am the Master of my fate." Now: "Whether we eat or drink" it is "unto the Lord." Nothing could have place in his life except as related to Him. "I count all things as refuse . . . that I might know Him." He so filled the whole desire and vision that Paul would "know nothing save Jesus Christ". He had seen the pitiful demon-possessed. He came to know that every man at any time is either God-swayed or Satan-swayed. He would be Christ-possessed. Others called him crazy, and possibly pitied him. He gloried in it. "I am His!" he seems to shout to the world.

3. His Mission: Christ Jesus' "Apostle". Beyond the technical and official title was to him, and to us, the meaning of the word, "one sent from". A messenger is always from some one, to some one, for something. He, as we, was sent from Christ. When he talked to a man, he represented God. And he was sent to other men. An ambassador to solitude is an absurdity, a messenger to nothing! God does not send out like that. We are all sent to others; it might be well to find out whom! And sent for a purpose. No one sends a messenger without a message. The Lord Jesus said: "As the Father sent me, so send I you," to "seek and to save that which is lost." We are, all of us, "ambassadors of Christ, as though God were entreating by us: 'Be ye reconciled to God'!" "As" Christ, . . . "so" Paul. "As" Christ, . . . "so" I!

4. His Motive. Apostle "through the will of God". He did not "choose his calling" (young man, do you not see the contradiction in the terms?') he was chosen. So our Example, "even Christ glorified not Himself to be made a high priest". We are the slaves. Christ is the Master. What He says, we do. Where He sends, we go. We are to ask His directions as to whom He would have us speak, and speak what He tells us to say. Personal work may be self-directed, and a failure. The life must be absolutely under His control, the motive to do His will as He tells us each move. Then there will be fruitage.

II. The Readers—Where and How They Lived.

1. Where? As every man, they had two homes.

(1) An External and Temporary abode, "at Ephesus". But this was probably a circular letter to several churches, written to fit any church, town, home or business. Every man thinks that where he lives or works or his set of circumstances, is the hardest. But that is immaterial. No surroundings or personality can mould me unless I so will. The really important thing is:

(2) The Eternal and Permanent abode. Not "where is your house?", but "where are you"? "At Ephesus?" yes, but "in Christ Jesus". "In the world," this or that; "in Me, peace". Living in two worlds at once! rather, "in the world, but not of it'. Even in the midst of this world moment by moment breathing only the pure atmosphere of God's presence, indwelt by the Spirit, and living by Christ, "homed in God". Whatever the external circumstances there is a "Surroundings" that comes between us and them; we have put on and are in Christ.

2. How they lived:

(1) Their calling, "saints", separated unto God, is what the word means; and then, because that which is set apart for God must be like Him, holy. Such God calls, demands and expects them, us, to be, "even as I am holy". And even "at Ephesus"! But what He expects of us He makes adequate provision for.

(2) Their Character, "faithful". Not saints today, and tomorrow devils. "Faithful" means dependable, not fickle or inconstant. Not "up and down" Christian (an anomaly, and mostly "down"); up as long as their puny strength lasts and then in their weakness stumbling. That is natural, but not supernatural. Which is Christianity?

The Secret of Dynamic. Saints can be faithful only "in Christ Jesus". Christ did not live that pitiful travesty of a life called "average", nor does He desire us to have that. And when "He is our life", His kind of life is the kind that will be seen in us. No, not "His kind", but His own life, in us, "earthen vessels", but "filled unto all the fulness of God". Christ Himself is that fulness. And not in figure or fancy, but in fact and in Person. He dwells Himself in our hearts by faith. "No longer I, but Christ liveth in me." So we can be faithful because He is, and He is our life.

PLAIN BIBLE STUDIES

Prepared by J. T. Bougher.

Note: In this new series of studies effort will be made to set forth in brief form wondrous things that God would have us know as told in His own eternal words.

Lesson No. 12.
Topic: Heaven; the Everlasting Habitation of the Redeemed.

"For here we have no continuing city."—Heb. 13:14.

All the great doctrines of Scripture are unfolded to us progressively, and are thus marvelously concealed from the eyes of the profane, yet manifestly open to the view of believers.

Generally each theme has its leading chapter, while the numerous references beautifully scattered throughout the sacred word, when assembled afford a comprehensive view of any stated subject. As we thus assemble many side-lights concerning Heaven, they at once blend into one powerful search-light, as it were, throwing its penetrating rays into the eternal habitation, and affording a wonderful foreview of the believer's home in Glory.

1. Heaven is "a prepared place, for a prepared people."—John 14:2.
2. A city whose builder and maker is God.—Heb. 11:16.
3. Its location; upward; confirmed by a multitude of references; use of the word: First, the airel heavens, when the birds and the clouds move. Second, the planetary heavens, and third, beyond the starry firmament, the Holy of Holies, the abode of our God, and of the Blood-bought band.
4. Paul was "caught up".—2 Cor. 12:2. Our Lord "taken up"; the Apostles "gazed up".—Acts 1:9-11.
5. Paul's view in the Spirit too glorious to be divulged.—2 Cor. 12:4; John 14:2.
6. Many mansions there.—John 14:2.
7. Knowledge there.—1 Cor. 13:12.
8. We shall know our loved ones.—1 Cor. 13:12.
9. Identity preserved.—Heb. 12:22-24.
10. Recognition, our hope and joy.—1 Thess. 2:10.
11. Perfect fellowship there.—Heb. 12:23.
12. All believers to be like Christ.—1 John 3:2.
13. A perfect place; no death, no sorrow, no pain.—Rev. 21:4.
14. No night there, and the gates ajar.—Rev. 21:25.
15. Worship and service their occupation.—Rev. 21:27.
16. Glory and honor there.—Rev. 21:26.
17. Fullness of joy, and pleasures forevermore.—Psalm 16:11.
18. His rest shall be glorious.—Isa. 11:10.
19. The believer's inheritance is "reserved".—1 Peter 1:4; Rev. 21:7.
20. His name shall be in their forehead.—Rev. 22:4.
21. Yea, I shall be satisfied when I awake in His likeness.—Psalm 17:15.
22. Those alone shall enter, whose names are written in the Lamb's book of life.—Rev. 21:27.
23. The unbeliever and the unsaved are not there.—Rev. 21:8.

We would also speak of other glories, and of the walls of jasper, and the streets of gold, but limited space permits us to but add a verse of the "glory song", which so beautifully embraces the above forecast:

"Friends will be there I have loved long ago,
Joy like a river around me will flow—
And just to be near the dear Lord I adore,
Will through the ages, be glory for me."

SEWANEE AT WORK

THE CHURCH'S UNIVERSITY IN THE SOUTH, TODAY AND IN THE FUTURE.

By Prescott Mabon

A CULTURAL education in an environment where the grandeur of nature is the inspiring background of every-day life—that is what Sewanee, the University of the South, has been working to provide ever since its foundation.

At no time in its history has there been more interest in the unusual work of this school, the only institution of higher learning in the South owned by the Church, than there is today, when from the high plateau where Sewanee stands, in the Cumberland Mountains of Tennessee, there goes forth an appeal for $2,000,000 to continue Sewanee's expansion. This appeal, now being broadcast among the people of the South and the people of the Church, and acknowledging the measure of their response to be very largely the measure of the increased service of Sewanee in the future, has behind it a number of facts which should engage the attention of all who know of Sewanee.

First of all, Sewanee not only stands for the development of the whole man in a healthy environment, where students and teachers work as friends, but as a small college it proposes that no amount of expansion shall rob it of the definite small-college atmosphere. It is definitely opposed to the prevalent modern tendency toward purely technical and highly specialized education in urban institutions of great size. Such education, it is felt at Sewanee, has its place; but such education can only supplement, it can never supplant, the development of character, intelligence and culture which is Sewanee's object.

Secondly, there is something about Sewanee which it has developed out of itself, and which has become rather famous throughout the South. It has no name more definite than "The Sewanee Spirit", and its manifestations can be noted more easily than its origins can be analyzed. In so far as those origins are discoverable, they appear to be the result of the fusion of various elements in Sewanee's history. The Bishops who founded the University of the South—Polk of Louisiana, Otey of Tennessee, and Elliott of Georgia—deliberately placed the school on a mountain, in the midst of a ten thousand acre domain more than sixty miles away from the nearest community of any real size. That was just before the War Between the States. During the struggle, Sewanee's buildings were destroyed, the very cornerstone of the University blown to pieces, and the original endowment entirely wiped out. There remained the land, one log cabin, and the faith of Charles Todd Quintard, succeeding Bishop Otey as Bishop of Tennessee. Bishop Quintard climbed the mountain with a few friends, put up a wooden cross where the chapel of the new Sewanee was to go, sang the Gloria in Excelsis with his companions, and descended the mountains determined to rebuild Sewanee.

He did. England gave money. In 1868 Sewanee reopened, with nine students, two log cabins, two frame buildings, and a chapel thirty-two by twenty-four feet in size. But after that, there were years of struggle. Students and teachers alike endured hardships unbelievable in these days of comfort. Professors sometimes returned their salaries to help the University fight through another term. Out of that struggle there grew a tradition of doing things together, and in the face of obstacles doing them well—for the main point is that Sewanee never once lowered her educational standards—that is today perhaps the largest single ingredient of the Sewanee spirit.

Another contributing factor, and what is at the same time the really unique thing about Sewanee, is the fact that on "The Mountain" there lies a purely intellectual community. It owns all the land, ten thousand acres of it. It gives employment to all who are neither professors nor students, and rents land to only desirable tenants. For its buildings, it quarries its own stone on its own domain. It owns coal mines, and it operates all local industries—electric light plant, water-works, hotels in the summer-time. The Vice-Chancellor, who administers the affairs of the University, administers also the affairs of the town. He is police commissioner, fire commissioner, chairman of the hospital board, and except for state and county roads, road commissioner. The treasurer of the University runs the local bank. In a word, Sewanee approximates a small principality.

Any one will see at a glance that this is no ordinary place. It may do its own work no better than other institutions do theirs—but it is not quite the same. That it does its own work well is attested by Sewanee's record. Sewanee's contribution to the Church has been particularly notable; from its Theological School three hundred and sixty-seven men have passed into the ministry, twenty-three of whom are Bishops. The University has a larger number of graduates mentioned in "Who's Who", in proportion to its size, than any other University in this country. It has also produced six Rhodes Scholars—a very large number in proportion to its size. Sewanee men throughout the country are to be found in positions of responsibility—and doing their work so well that a President of the United States was once moved to remark that he knew of no university of the same size, "in any part of the country, which has done more for the cause of good citizenship".

This is high praise, and only lack of space excludes the quotation of more like it.

There is another thing about Sewanee which is not only unusual, but testifies to the wisdom and far-sightedness of the Founders. Sewanee belongs to the Church, and it serves as a bond of unity between the twenty-two dioceses in the South which now share its ownership—but it is in no sense a strictly sectarian school. Last year some forty per cent of the students were of other affiliations. Owned by the Church, and with a tradition which in its religious aspect has been described as "reverently progressive", Sewanee makes its own Episcopal affiliations not a barrier to the admission of other Christians, but the background of its welcome. Nor does this diminish the importance of Sewanee's function as a centralizing factor in Church life. Every year there gather on the plateau, for the sessions of the Sewanee Summer Training School, hundreds of young people and adults who come to study the problems and purposes of Christian living. That Sewanee has given its own name to the Fourth Province of the Church is no small sign of its prominence in the affairs of the Church in the South.

Argument as to whether or not the Church is indebted to Sewanee and thereby in honor bound to aid its extension is less to the point than the simple fact that Sewanee is an institution in which the people of the Church may justly take pride. And if people wish to see Sewanee expand its work to greater usefulness, the best thought that they can have in giving their aid at this crucial time is merely the thought that they are helping a good school to do better work along lines which they may be sure will increase the extent and the prestige of the Church's life in the South. Sewanee knows that to make a gift—and particularly a gift which is essentially an investment in the future—is better than to pay a debt. One feature of the proposed expansion of Sewanee is the creation of a $500,000 endowment for the Theological School, and also the erection of a new building for the same school. In effect, this offers a splendid opportunity, for those who want to see the Church make the most of its opportunities in the South, to increase the facilities for making good ministers. Sewanee is the Church's fountain-head for ministerial education in the South; Sewanee's record in the production of clergymen is a fine one; but Sewanee today must keep the best professors, and get the best professors when it needs them, and for this it must have money. Few people probably realize, also, that there is no room for the books which theological students must have. These obstacles are being put up with today, perforce—but the struggle to make both ends meet absorbs energy and impedes the work, and additional funds would certainly have the final effect of benefiting the Church's work.

When the Theological School is looked after, when necessary additions to capital funds have been made, when new dormitories to take the place of obsolete wooden ones have been built, when certain other necessary improvements have been made on the domain—then it is planned to add a new unit to Sewanee, according to the plan of the Founders whereby Sewanee was to grow as an Oxford for America. It is in this way that the genuine character of Sewanee may be preserved in the face of necessary expansion. More young men want to come to the University now than can be admitted; the present unit, with one or two more dormitories, could admit more and still remain a small college. In the future, the greater Sewanee would not be transformed into a single vast University, all the old flavor lost, but could be a group of small units working in harmony, according to the Oxford system. The working out of this plan, with the next unit to cost about a million dollars—the second of the two millions now sought—would indeed make Sewanee more than ever a center of usefulness in education, and a source of pride to the entire Church and to the Southland in particular.

GEOLOGY AND EVOLUTION

By Nelson P. Dame

PART II.

THE "Challenger" Expedition sent out by the British Government under Sir John Murray in 1872-6 has been said to mark "the greatest scientific event of the Nineteenth Century". It was sent out to study the ocean from surface to bottom, and to find out what is going on there. Among the things they found out was that "Deposits like those of the fossiliferous rocks are not being formed anywhere in our deep seas or oceans". From end to end over the whole ocean floor, there is no gravel, no sand, no clay being shifted or deposited, such as we find in the fossiliferous rocks. Hence the most modern scientists now accept the doctrine of the permanency of the oceans, and acknowledge that the old theories in explanation of the manner in which the fossiliferous strata were formed must be given up.

Then came the startling discoveries of Mendel in the field of heredity. His book was published in 1865, but it passed unnoticed until 1900, when it was discovered by three men almost simultaneously. The discoveries of Mendel have been extended and enlarged by hundreds if not thousands of other scientists until the general principles of "Mendelism" can be demonstrated mathematically, and are universally accepted in the scientific world. Professor William Bateson, the greatest living apostle of Science in the world today, and, of course, an evolutionist, sums up the discoveries of Mendelism as follows:

First, that in great measure the properties of organisms are due to the presence of distinct, detachable elements (unit characters) separately transmitted in heredity. And Secondly, that the parent cannot transmit to the offspring an element, and consequently the corresponding property, which it does not itself possess," and which, of course, is acquired by heredity.

That means that acquired characters cannot be transmitted by heredity. It means far more than that. "A species," says the Standard Dictionary, "is a classificatory group of plants or animals having members that differ among themselves only in minor details, and are capable of fertile interbreeding indefinitely". To put it another way, "If the two kinds breed freely with each other and the offspring is indefinitely fertile, the kinds are called varieties, but if not, they are called species". Until lately nearly every variety of animal or plant was classed as a species. This was a great help to the doctrine of evolution. But since Mendel appeared on the scene all this has changed. Professor Bateson, in his great Toronto address a few years ago, said: "When students of other sciences ask us now what is currently believed about the origin of species, we have no clear answer to give. Faith has given place to agnosticism." They were confident that they knew until Mendel came. Now they have to confess that they do not know. "How easy it all used to look," he said. "What glorious assumptions went unrebuked!" "Professed men of science offered very confident opinions on these nebulous topics which would now scarcely pass muster in a newspaper or a sermon." "We cannot see how the differentiation into species came about. Variation of many kinds" (within the limits of the species', often considerable, we daily witness, but no origin of species." "In dim outline evolution is evident enough. But that particular and essential bit of the theory of evolution which is concerned with the origin and nature of species remains utterly mysterious."

According to modern science, the species "Dog" includes all varieties of dogs, wolves, foxes, hyenas, etc. And the first pair of dogs that appeared on earth had in them all the "unit characters" which belong to the whole species of dog. The variations that occur within the limits of this great species are due to the recombination of these unit characters in new ways, some recessive (or latent), some dominant, some perhaps omitted or lost, but none added that are not already actual or latent in the parent. How did that first pair of dogs arise? Where did they get those unit characters with which they began life? Mendelism says these characters can be gotten now only by heredity. They cannot be acquired. Science, says Professor Bateson, has no answer to give to that question. This, of course, does not prove that that first pair of dogs was created. But it leaves the door wide open to those who wish to go in that way. It does another thing. It makes it very plain that all the plants and animals on the globe today came from a comparatively few types which survived that world-wide tragedy which all mankind remembers as the Deluge.

The scientists themselves are destroying the foundation on which evolution rests. President Faunce, of Brown University, stated in an address not long since that "the law of evolution—as old as the New Testament declaration of 'first the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear'—is now as firmly established as the law of gravitation". Professor William Bateson, speaking to and for the real scientists, says "Our faith in evolution is unshaken. Our doubts are . . . as to the origin of species. Any day that mystery may be solved". But he agrees with Ernst Haeckel and Herbert Spencer that "the inheritance of acquired characters is a necessary axiom of the monistic creed", and that "if there has been no inheritance of acquired characters, there has been no evolution". He knows, however, that that mystery has not been solved yet. The law of evolution then with Professor Bateson is an article of faith. He believes in it. But it has not been "as firmly established as the law of gravitation. And it will not be until the mystery of the origin of species has been solved. So say the real scientists: the men who know.

Since evolution, then, is not an established fact but only an article of faith: "The substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen," it is just as rational, just as scientific to follow Ernst Haeckel's advice and "accept a mysterious creation of all the species as described in the Mosaic account".

There is another reading of these geologial records, which conforms much more closely to the facts, and is far more reasonable than the reading which is commonly accepted and taught in our schools.

In most localities we do not have to go very far down into the earth to find granite or other so-called igneous rocks, which contain no traces of fossils. These azoic or archean rocks constitute practically all of the earth's crust, there being only a comparatively thin skin of fossil-bearing strata, like the skin of an apple. These sedimentary deposits contain the remains of various forms of animal and vegetable life which once existed on the earth. One layer of sedimentary rock will contain mostly fish, let us say. Another will contain mammals, mostly. Still another will show large quantities of invertebrates. Another will be composed almost wholly of the remains of vegetation, and so on. Of course, none of them will contain only mammals, or invertebrates, or reptiles or amphibians or fish. Generally each layer of sedimentary deposit will contain a great variety of fossils, though one kind will often predominate.

Now it is calmly taken for granted by the geologists and biologists that only a few of the lower forms of life existed all over the globe at one time. They died in the course of nature and their remains fell to the bottom of the sea and were slowly covered by sediment which eventually turned to stone. Those lowest forms of life were followed by a few other forms of a higher type of life, which in turn covered the whole earth; and these in the due course of nature died and left their remains in the sedimentary rocks; and so on up the line until we reach the modern age in which we live. It is calmly assumed that the lowest forms of life slowly evolve into the next higher, by the inheritance of acquired characters. And, of course, it must have taken long ages for these deposits to have been made in the seas, and for the evolution of the lower forms of life into the next higher.

Now these are all pure assumptions, without a particle of evidence to support them. And many of the great doctors of science, like Spencer and Huxley, etc., have denounced these baseless assumptions as "untenable if analyzed" and "physically absurd". And yet today those "absurd" assumptions lie at the basis of geology "as she is taught" in our schools and colleges.

We have around us now a world in which all kinds of living organisms exist side by side, contemporaneously, each, as it were, in its own "province"; worms, mollusks, crustaceans, insects, fishes, amphibians, reptiles, mammals, and man. What evidence is there that the world whose fossil remains we have in the sedimentary rocks was not like our present world in this respect? It would certainly be more reasonable to assume that that word was like our own, with all kinds of life existing in it at the same time, each, of course, in its own "province" than to assume that only a few types existed at a time.

Now that world was destroyed. The overwhelming mass of animal life, whose remains we have in the fossils, did not die slow natural deaths; they died sudden and violent deaths. This is the almost universal testimony of all the great geologists who have examined these fossils. Every one knows how a fish acts when it is hooked, or caught in a net. Hugh Miller says that nine-tenths of the fish in the "Old Red Sandstone" are in the attitude of living fish fighting for their lives; "the figures are contorted, contracted, curved, the tail in many instances is bent round to the head, the spines stick out, the fins are spread to the full, as in fish that die in convulsions". "They were suddenly buried in living shoals, by the sediment which now contains them." Some even have traces of color upon their skins. This is true of the overwhelming mass of the creatures of all kinds whose remains we find in the rocks. They "perished suddenly" by some tremendous catastrophe. It is equally true of the vegetation whose remains we have in the coal beds. Coal was not made by trees slowly dying in a forest. It was made by living forests torn up and leveled by some mighty power, and quickly covered with mud.

This destruction of the earth naturally imprinted itself upon the memories, and perpetuated itself in the traditions of all the older peoples of the earth. The Hebrews, the Indians, the Persians, Babylonians, Syrians, Greeks, Romans, Americans, and Polynesians, all record such an occurrence in their early literature. They all ascribe the destruction to a flood of waters of enormous proportions, rushing back and forth over the earth, sweeping over the highest mountains, and destroying practically all the animal life on the earth, except that which was preserved in an ark or boat. And they all agree that the destruction was wrought suddenly in a very short time, within the compass of a year.

If that elder world was like ours in the respect that all kinds of life existed in it contemporaneously, each in its own "province", as it is with us, as it is most reasonable to assume; and if the destruction was wrought by the tremendous deluge to which the whole race bears witness, it is easy to see the absurdity of separating the sedimentary deposits, as our geologists do, by millions of years. We would need the millions of years, and then some, if we are going to assume that these deposits were made as slowly as we imagine that such deposits are being made now in our deep seas. But if they were made by such a deluge as the traditions of mankind describe, then it is patent that no one deposit can be said to be necessarily and universally older or younger than another. And it cannot be said that any one fossil is necessarily older than another. All these creatures were living at the same time. They were all destroyed practically at the same time, within the same hour or day or week, perhaps. The deposits of sediment or mud that buried them were all made about the same time. While the "Devonian" deposit was being made by the rushing waters in one place, in another the "Cretaceous" was being made. As the waters rushed over the "province" where one kind of life was found and buried those creatures in one kind of mud, they would rush over another "province" where other kinds of life were found, and bury them in other kinds of mud. As a matter of fact, we find just exactly this condition of things in the rocks. The deposits never succeed each other as they are given in the school charts. They are found in every kind of order or disorder: the "oldest" lying on top of the "youngest", the Cretaceous lying next to the Archean, or the Cambrian on top of the Cretaceous, as occurs in great areas covering hundreds of square miles in our Western country. The same Deluge that killed the fish of the Old Red Sandstone in one place, drowned men and covered them with mud in another. All sedimentary deposits, and all the fossils in them, whether of invertebrates or mammals, whether of fish or men, were made about the same time.

The extent and the power of the Deluge that destroyed that elder world is worthy of attention. The earth itself furnishes most conclusive evidence of its enormous proportions, and of its almost inconceivable power.

Northern Germany and Poland are covered in places with great boulders of a kind of stone that does not belong there. They are called "erratics", wanderers that have been brought there from the mountains of Scandinavia. They are said to be, some of them, of great size. They have come across the Baltic Sea, five, six, seven, eight, and, the smaller ones, nine hundred miles away from their original home. How did they get there? For years the men of science have been trying to persuade themselves that they must have been brought there by glacial ice. But Sir Henry Howorth in his monumental work, "The Glacial Nightmare", has punctured that bubble, and, though he hated to admit it because it corroborated the Hebrew tradition of the Deluge, he had to confess that it could have been done only by water, in a mighty rushing torrent.

In Northern Siberia the remains of incredible numbers of the enormous elephant, which we call the mammoth, have been found covered with sand and mud, and frozen so suddenly that some of them had food in their mouths, and most of those found had food in their stomachs, showing that they were browsing when the disaster befell them. They tell us that since the Tenth Century at least, for more than a thousand years, these remains have been quarried for the sake of the ivory tusks, and a regular trade in fossil ivory has been carried on both in China and Europe. It has been estimated that the tusks of not less than eight hundred thousand of these great beasts have been sold. The soil of some large islands are said to consist only of sand and ice with such quantities of the mammoth bones as almost to compose their chief substance. Every now and then when the ice retreats from unusual warmth, the bodies of more or less nearly perfect animals, standing erect, have been brought to light, and their flesh has been eaten by dogs and wolves. It is plain that these great animals did not die natural deaths. They were suddenly caught and killed by some mighty disaster, covered with mud and frozen "as of a single winter's night", says Dana.

An Advent Bible Study

By the Rev. Henry Ward, Rector of Bispham Parish, Blackpool, England.

Aim of Lesson: The Thought of the Coming Judge.—St. Luke 16:1-12.

1. The Parable.

A Steward—One who was entrusted with his lord's goods.—Gen. 15:2; 43:19; 44:1. Responsible for his master's property, land, rents, etc.—use them to best advantage. Render an account of his stewardship.

Unfaithful—The day of reckoning came. Wasted his master's goods. Not used them to the best of his ability. Not collected the debts owing to his master.

Unjust—Knowing all this acts unjustly as well. Forgives one-half the debts due to his master. Why commended? Because he prepared for the future, acted promptly, used the opportunity.

2. Every Christian.

A Steward—Entrusted with a talent. To use His master's goods to the best advantage.—Prov. 11:24. Must one day render an account.

Responsible—For the way we use our talents. For the way we value our treasure. For the way we spend our lives.

Required—To be faithful, not necessarily successful! An Eastern steward could not compel people to rent his master's land, etc. To render an account.

3. Advent Speaks of the Coming Judge.

The Judgment Seat of Christ—For all stewards: Deeds done in the body. Work attempted, talents entrusted.—2 Cor. 5:10. All must be fireproof: Gold—Divine Righteousness.—Phil. 2:13. Silver—redemption.—John 15:5. Precious Stones—having a lustre not their own.—2 Cor. 4:6.

The Great White Throne—Not for stewards, Christians, but for unbelievers, disobedient, wicked: only one verdict: Depart.—Rev. 20:12.

TERTULLIAN OF CARTHAGE

190-220 A. D.

TERTULLIAN is one of the most interesting characters of the early Church, as well as one of its most original and eloquent writers. He was born in Carthage, the son of a Centurion. His father was not a Christian; and Tertullian became a famous lawyer and rhetorician in his native city. He was noted not only for his impetuous eloquence of speech, but also for his noble and generous character. He became early the leading advocate of his city and so a man of commanding influence. Late in life he was converted to Christ and was baptized. He then studied for awhile in Rome, at that time the centre of Christian culture. Afterwards he returned to Carthage and took Orders.

He wrote voluminously, though as in the case of most of the ancient authors, a number of his works are lost. He was the originator of Latin ecclesiastical terminology, which we have largely inherited from him through Cyprian Jerome, and the great Augustine. He defended Christianity against heathen adversaries with enthusiasm and with wonderful power. A master of the Latin of his day, and writing on all sorts of matters concerning both theology and morals, and Church administration, his remaining works are still of great value, while the loss of so many of them has been always a matter of keen regret to all students of Christian history and manners.

Toward the close of his life, Tertullian became a Montanist. These Montanists, followers of one Montanus of Asia Minor, were intense ascetics and puritans. They believed that Montanus and his prophets were the promised organs of the Paraclete. They had visions, fell into trances and prophesied. They claimed to be agents of the Holy Spirit to reveal directly God's will as to the meaning of Holy Writ. They did not reject any of the tenets of the Gospel; but were zealous for the reform of the lax discipline of the Church and of the loose manners of professing Christians. They earnestly opposed the Gnosticism of the day, which sought to show that heathenism taught much of divine truth and insisted that Christ alone and solely revealed God. They were the revivalists of the extreme, ecstatic type, seeking in that early day to waken the Church from its torpor, and to recall Christians to holiness of life.

Tertullian, about 201, without leaving the Church and still ardently believing and preaching the Gospel, adopted with all his warm heart and eager enthusiasm for true godliness and definite separation from the world, this movement for the reform of abuses and for the use of rigid ecclesiastical discipline. His break with the Church of the day was not in any matters of doctrine, but in the matter of discipline, in the question of separating the Church from the corruptions of the world. And in all that he taught and said, he constantly and wholly referred to the Scriptures, as his sole guide in what he taught, whether of creed or of practice.

I feel sure that the Montanists, though doubtless extremists in their preachings and practices, as against the cold formalism and sinful corruptions of the Church, are not really known to us. We know them and their practices chiefly through their adversaries, through the men who branded them as heretics and finally suppressed them. It is much as if we should know of Luther, Calvin and the reformers, chiefly through Jesuit authors; or should get our opinions of Wesley, Whitfield, and the revivalists of the Eighteenth Century, from ardent Anglo-Catholics. Catholics.

Let us see what this great apologist for Christianity, and ardent reformer of the Church life, thought of the Scriptures:

He says of a certain matter in dispute: "Nothing is certain in respect of it, because the Scripture does not declare it."

He declares that controversies are settled "by referring the points in dispute to the Scriptures of God".

"Take from the heretics," says he, "the principles they hold in common with the heathen, and force them to prove their points from the Scriptures alone, and they will not be able to stand."

Is he an idolator of a Book when he says: "I adore the fulness of Scripture which manifests to me both the Creator and His works"?

He writes of the great Church of Rome of that day: "She joins the Law and the Prophets with the writings of the Evangelists and the Apostles, and thence draws her faith."

Would that She did this in our day!

Of certain heretics he writes:

"These heretics wishing to show the ignorance of the Apostles bring forward the fact that Peter and those with him were rebuked by Paul, etc. . . . . Now these men reject the Acts of the Apostles, therefore they must first show who this Paul was, what he was before he became an Apostle and how he got to be an Apostle. . . . They believe forsooth, without the Scriptures, that they may believe contrary to the Scriptures."

The latter statement is sufficiently modern. The errorists at that time formed their opinions, made up their theories, independently of the Scriptures (without the Scriptures), and then on the basis of such non-Scriptural theories, condemned the Scriptures.

DOLLARS AND WORLD PEACE: A consideration of nationalism and imperialism: By Kirby Page.

EVOLUTION OF THE ENGLISH HYMN: By Frederick John Gillman. Price $2.50. Macmillan.

Lovers of Church Hymnology, clerical and lay, will find delight and much stimulating thought in this book. It is a comprehensive survey of the origins and development of Christian Hymns from the First Century to the preseut day. Its accurate scholarship is clothed upon—with lucidity and charm of diction and the radiance of spiritual devotion, and embellished with anecdote and biography. Next only to the Bible, the Hymnology of Christendom is probably the most influential medium of religious culture we possess. How slight, however, is the knowledge of the subject even among those who love their favorite hymns. The Church's new Hymnal notes the hymn author and date with each hymn. The reading of such books as this reveals the spacious rooms of life and saintliness down the ages to which these names and dates are the neglected keys.

THE WORLD'S FAMOUS POEMS. And Prose Selections. Religious and Popular: Compiled by James Gilchrist Lawson. $2.50. (Harper.)

How often one wishes he could readily find some short poem that lingers half-forgotten in memory since childhood or youth. What delight to happen upon it. In turning the pages of this compilation of 350 or more selections, one is apt to find a score of such, and along with them the most striking of the present-day shorter poems. It contains indices of first lines, of titles and of authors.

CHRISTIANITY AND SOCIAL ADVENTURING: Edited by Jerome Davis. $2.50. (Century.)

Professor Davis is the Head of the Department of Social Service, Yale University. "This book," he says, "describes some of the ways in which the individual can adventure in his home community. . . . The average person who really wishes to make his life pattern square with his faith pattern will here find a whole arsenal of suggestions. The volume should also prove valuable for the minister and social worker; material is available and waiting for the rudiments of a dozen sermons." The twenty-six chapters present a symposium, by twenty-six of the outstanding leaders of the country in the cause of social justice, from William E. Borah to John R. Mott, each dwelling with some special phase of the great subject of how the individual Christian and organized Churches through civic and social agencies best bring about the well-being of society and the coming of the Kingdom of God as regnant in the daily life of humanity. Together they form a vigorous and searching study of the means of civic and social betterment.

THE PARADOX OF RELIGION: By Dr. Willard Sperry. Published by The Macmillan Company.

This little book of fifty pages presents two lectures on "What Religion Is" and "What Religion Does", which formed the basis of this year's Hibbert Trust Lectures. The learned author is the well-known dean of the Harvard Theological School. The lectures were delivered in several cities in England.

We confess, after having read them carefully, that they have been very helpful in clearing up our thoughts on the very complex problem of our religious experience. Especially in the second lecture on the operation of religion in ourselves a very clear division is established between the three conceptions of the religious relationship, Magic, Mysticism and Grace.

Magic subjects God to the control of men, making man the master.

Mysticism has a tendency to get rid of man and ignores the very stubborn actuality of self-consciousness

The Grace of God frees man from these two errors and puts him in his real place in the divine order. "Bring father to a son, being son to a father, each is worth while for its own sake."

A PILGRIMAGE TO PALESTINE: By Harry Emerson Fosdick. Published by The Macmillan Company, New York.

This is a very handsome and delightful book and especially suitable for a Christmas present. It is beautifully bound in blue and gold. Price $2.50. The publishers say that "Dr. Fosdick has put his pilgrimage to Palestine in a category by itself by making it a simply amazing pageant of historical associations, an exhibit of the ramifications between the geographical features of Palestine and the contents of the Bible, which is most illuminating".

The book has been appearing serially in The Ladies' Home Journal and has given great pleasure to its readers. Dr. Fosdick has not followed the usual plan in writing a book of travels. He deals with geography, history and descriptions, richly illustrated by story and incident. All is in orderly arrangement from the Hebrews at Sinai to the modern Zionists. Three chapters are used to recall to the reader the "Land" itself and its background of history and the impressiveness of Sinai. Then follows chapter four, "The Hebrew Invasion", and, then, in order following: "The City of David," "From Gilgal to Galilee," "Journeys to the Prophets' Homes," "With the Master in Nazareth," "The Galilean Ministry," "Going Up to be Crucified,' "Christ and Christianity in Palestine," "Palestine Tomorrow."

At the end of the volume is a good index and a reference list of the best recent books in Palestine, its history and archaeology.

Dr. Fosdick's erudition, his descriptive powers together with his fine taste in his selection of material has placed his book in the front ranks of travel books.

CHRIST IN THE HEBREW ALPHABET: By the Rev. John Macmillan. Published by Marshall Brothers, London and Edinburgh.

Here is a book for the Fundamentalist and the man who believes in the plenary, verbal inspiration of the Bible. It is also good for the most advanced modernist. It is written by a keen, wideawake Scotsman who knows his Hebrew and can teach most of the post-graduates in that simple language. He writes on the front page "The plan of this book is to find wholesome, edifying, suggestive teaching in the meaning of each letter of the Hebrew Alphabet. There is notihng fanciful taught here, but only what can be substantiated by our Lord's own words and those by the inspired writers of the Bible.

The learned author goes deep into the wells of etymology and finds evidence of obscure workers, who, throughout the ages, guided by the Spirit of God, have manipulated the Hebrew letters for the glory of God and the salvation of men.

To illustrate this let us take Aleph, the first letter:

It is similar in sound to E as in Elohim (plural for "God").

The word Aleph means an Ox. The Ox goes first as he draws his burden behind him. The Hebrew character for Aleph, in earlier ages was more like the head of the ox than in Israel's day and at present. But even now the strength and figure of the ox are indicated in the letter. The ox, in the Bible, stands for strength, service and sacrifice. So Christ. The greatest of all strong men was the Lord Jesus Christ. Beth, the second letter means a house as in Bethel, "House of God". The home is indicated, the unit of society and the Church.

Gimel, the third letter, means "Camel". The Camel in the Scriptures symbolized patience, burden bearing and endurance.

And so on through the Alphabet. The author believes there is no other inspiration of the Bible but verbal inspiration.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

"A MINISTER OF CHRIST."

Mr Editor:

In response to your request, I reply that certainly I am glad to say over my own signature that "if the Creeds of the Church keep men out of the ministry, then, I say, let them stay out. We do not need that kind".

This expression of opinion was induced by the reported proposal of a minister at the Liberal Evangelical Conference, namely, that "certain articles of the Creed be omitted".

But may I add a few words more? I have deep sympathy with such men in their mental disturbance, but none whatever in their disloyalty to the Church. It would be similar to the act of the Trojans in admitting the wooden horse filled with warriors, the only difference being that they were unaware. The Church can never be destroyed nor weakened by enemies on the outside. And the more conscientious the in-side disloyalists are, the more damage they can accomplish.

I do sympathize with their mental disturbance. Some weeks after I entered the Virginia Seminary, as we began to study the Creed under Dr. Micou, "Jake White" and I sat together on the back seat. Suddenly I put my hand on his arm, and said tensely: "I am in the wrong place, White. I don't believe that. I never heard it before!" He replied: "Keep quiet. Don't go so fast. You never have thought before!" "Jake White" had an A. M. from William and Mary, and a Ph. D., from Columbia. And his income was such that he did not have to have a job.

The wisdom of what he said was plain. Yet I would not have entered the ministry, had I been unable to accept the Creed.

So I waited and thought and studied. Fortunately, I had no one to explain it away, or to reveal to me the secret of "mental reservation" in the matter with my honor intact.

But I have the Faith—such that "I Know Whom I believe"; but it is not by material proof. First, Jesus is the Divine Son of God; then He could not be the natural son of Joseph. Next, it is a most natural thing to believe as the Scriptures say, born of the Holy Ghost and the Virgin Mary. Otherwise, where is there any Incarnation? And so what would there be to preach that might be called the Good News? The Foundation is undermined and gone.

Excuse me, but men who cannot accept the Creed, and yet desire to do religious work, had far better become Y. M. C. A. Secretaries, or Unitarian lecturers. Immature souls do not need such men, for they can only be damaged: and mature lives can only suffer heartache. But they need assurance and spiritual strength.

Men whose brand of intellectual power is such that they cannot humbly bow before the Incarnate Son of God and give Him full Faith are far too heavy for the spiritually-minded Souls of men who need and desire to Know the Divine Saviour.

Mr. Editor, if you desire to publish this, you have my permission. But I wish also to say this: I am a plain and unvarnished Christian, without other classification. There is only One Church, and it is the Body of Christ. When the New York Churchman speaks, then I am a Fundamentalist. When the voice of W. J. Bryan's followers is heard, then I am a Modernist. BUT I will not have the brand of any man or clan placed on me, save the brand of a Minister of the Christ, the Divine Son of God, the Everlasting Saviour.

THANKSGIVING.

Mr. Editor:

For copies of the Southern Churchman sent to me through the kindness of some unknown benefactor, and for all other blessings, I am giving thanks, on this Thanksgiving Day.

I wondered, at first, how I could ever find time to read a paper of that size, coming four times a month, but I now find myself looking forward to the next issue with eagerness.

(MISS) ALBA MALONE.

Waco, Texas.

THE ULTRA-MODERN CONCEPTION OF THE PASTORAL OFFICE.

Mr. Editor:

The two following passages, one from Acts 6:2-4, and the other from an editorial in a diocesan journal, seem in positive antagonism, the one being an apostolic instruction for the creation of the first body comparable to the modern Church vestry, and the other written by one of much experience in raising parish and diocesan funds.

Acts 6:2-4: "It is not fit that we should forsake the word of God, and serve tables. Look ye out, therefore, brethren, from among you seven men of good report, full of the Spirit and wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business. But we will continue steadfastly in prayer and in the ministry of the word."

"I have heard clergymen, admirable men, say that the financial end of the Church belongs to the vestry, that the priest is to minister at the altar, and not to collect money. That is a wonderful theory. But the Psalm tells of the sparrow that flits about the altar, and the Gospel tells that two sparrows are sold for a farthing. Under the leadership of such an idea, the altar will support about two sparrows, and a farthing will be about all that will come there. Heaven help the poor priest that tries to live on such an altar."

In the main, the paper quoted is excellent, except that its dominant, emphasized and repeated idea is, that it is the proper work of the rector to be the "crux of the situation, the key man", in raising—not mission and benevolent funds alone—but the parish budget, the responsibility for which "must rest squarely on the rector". Further, it is also the ministerial stipend which he is expected to collect and increase, as shown by the above extract and other parts of the paper.

And the rector can easily find time for this by cutting out the making of sermons and parish calls: "The day when the rector sat in his study all the mornings, reading, and preparing sermons, and spent the afternoons in calling and drinking tea, is gone." When sermons and parish calls are to be made, is not suggested. Probably the former at night, and the latter cut out to prevent interruptions to the bridge players. What is to be the function of the vestry under this new dispensation, which is said to be already in operation to an extent which amounts to a revolution, is not stated. Perhaps it is to remain as an honorary, although useless office, a vestigial remnant of the Apostolic foundation; or perhaps (as the difficulty of converting the vestry is spoken of) as one more obstacle for the rector to hurdle to keep him busy and interested.

To a country rector it would seem that every large city parish has enough business men to do its business, and the opportunities for spiritual service in such a parish would be large enough to engage all the rector's energy. And I have seen it demonstrated repeatedly that in a small parish, where the activity of the rector in raising the parish funds, in which his stipend is the principal item, would be improper and offensive, vestries can and will do their work without the domination of the rector, and where, consequently, the rector's function of placing the mission and charitable needs before the people brings a better response than where he is the chief money-raiser for the parish.

Perhaps my position is "mid-Victorian", but it is undoubtedly Apostolic.

CHURCH MUSIC.

Mr. Editor:

In behalf of the Joint Commission on Church Music I beg to announce that the following publications of the Commission are now available:

The Choral Service: A complete compendium of the liturgical melodies of clergy and people in Morning and Evening Prayer, the Litany, and the Holy Communion. With an historical preface, and extended notes upon the music and directions for its proper rendering. Published by authority of General Convention.

A List of Anthems: Classified according to season and feast, degree of difficulty, length, etc.

A Selected List of Standard Works on Church Music.

A special edition of the Choral Service in pamphlet form, for the use of congregations, is in the press; also an edition of the same for the use of the priest at the altar.

The Choral Service may be purchased, and copies of the lists obtained free of charge, upon application to the publishers, the H. W. Gray Company, 159 East Forty-eighth Street, New York.

Further publications of the Commission now in preparation are a Classified List of Services and Canticles, and a similar List of Hymns and Tunes.

CHRISTCHURCH SCHOOL.

Mr. Editor:

The decision of the Rev. Dr. William Page Dame, of Baltimore, to dedicate his unusual gifts and mature experience as a leader of boys to the development of an outstanding Church School for boys in Tidewater Virginia, is of immeasurable value to the lives of many boys and through them to the whole country.

Christchurch School is very young; its alumni are few and not yet established in life. The rural section about the School is rich only in great traditions as "the cradle of Virginia families". In all Tidewater Virginia, where the Episcopal Church was supreme in Colonial days and where she is beginning to regain her influence, this is the only preparatory boarding school for boys. Indeed, it is central in the whole Chesapeake Bay region, where the Anglo-Saxon roots of the nation were first planted and the native stock is still pure in blood and true in ideals. Many boys from elsewhere also receive the advantage of education in this prevailing atmosphere.

The standards of the School are high; its life is simple; its student body and staff are select; its charges are at cost, $525 for board and tuition, or $600 for all expenses.

In a country school the life revolves around the home of the Headmaster, especially of a Headmaster like Dr. Dame with a remarkable capacity for influencing boys through social contacts. More than half the cost of the house has been found. Before work can begin the rest must be subscribed. The new gymnasium is altogether without equipment. To complete adequately both projects some twenty thousand dollars is still needed.

The range of subscriptions has been from $100 to $2,000. No public appeal is being made. Gifts may be designated as memorials. Payments may be at convenience, completion of the house being planned for June, 1928. Checks should be made payable to G. M. Brydon, Treasurer.

Among the Trustees of the School, besides myself, are the Bishop of Virginia, Dr. James H. Dillard of the General Education Board, and the Rev. Dr. Beverley D. Tucker, Jr. We have found it necessary to call for help from certain special friends of Church School education, and your response will be greatly appreciated.

EDMUND L. WOODWARD, Dean.

Church Intelligence

The Deaf.

There are said to be 89,000 deaf people in the United States. The Episcopal Church has sixteen clergy working among its deaf communicants. The field of one of them, for example, the Rev. H. L. Tracy, comprises the three Virginia dioceses and the dioceses of West Virginia and Washington, an area of 66,648 square miles. The mission for the deaf in the Diocese of Maine, where the Rev. J. Stanley Light is missionary, celebrated its Golden Jubilee last fall. The Rev. Franklin C. Smielau has for his field the dioceses of Ohio, Southern Ohio, Indianapolis, Michigan and Western Michigan. Others have similar fields.

Rt. Rev. H. St. Geo. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.

Business Woman's Club Entertains.

On November 7, over three hundred Nurses gathered at St. James' Parish House, Richmond, as the guests of the Business Woman's Club.

Addresses were given by Dr. G. Freeland Peter, Dr. Luther Scherer, and Mrs. Nannie Pegram Eddington. Music was furnished by Mrs. Joseph Geisinger, Mrs. Lawrence Price, Mr. Horace Powell, Prof. and Mrs. Edwin Naff, with Miss Helen Tremaine as accompanist.

The Parish House was decorated with pine, autumn leaves, flowers and cathedral candles.

St. James' Church is the only church in our city that has established through the women of its congregation two hospitals, and it is in keeping with this mothering, nursing spirit, that all student and staff nurses from the fourteen hospitals were entertained.

This influence will prevail during the coming winter as a group of the Business Women at stated intervals will provide "Fireside Evenings" in our Parish House for all professional business women who are away from their own firesides.

Congregation to Separate.

Grace Church, Petersburg, one of the oldest churches of Petersburg, has decided to separate into two congregations; one of which will continue to occupy the old church building at High and Cross Streets; the other, to organize a new church and occupy Grace Chapel, on Walnut Hill. The decision to form two separate congregations was brought about harmoniously and grew out of the fact that Grace Church had expanded its work to another part of the city. The Rev. E. R. Carter, D. D., rector of Grace Church, has tendered his resignation and has been extended a call to the new congregation on Walnut Hill. Dr. Carter has not yet announced his decision.

Anniversary.

On November 20, St. Peter's, Norfolk, celebrated its forty-first anniversary. The Rt. Rev. Wm. L. Gravatt, D. D., Bishop of West Virginia, and first resident rector of St. Peter's, was the preacher at the morning service. At Evening Prayer, the Bishop of West Virginia and the Bishop of Southern Virginia were in the sanctuary. Addresses were made by Bishop Tucker and Mr. J. Edward Cole, of Norfolk, a former vestryman. The church was filled to capacity. St. Peter's was organized by Bishop Tucker during his incumbency of Old St. Peter's, Norfolk.

Reports Diocesan Work.

Bishop Garland, the night of December 2, at a dinner meeting in the Penn Athletic Club, of Phildalephia, of about six hundred Episcopal Church clergy and men and women parish workers, presented an official report of constructive work in the diocese on behalf of its missions and institutions which, the Bishop announced, had not been equalled in the entire previous ten-year period.

It was the first official announcement by the Bishop of the direct results of the movement started a year ago when more than $2,000,000 was subscribed in ten days by 20,000 parishioners towards a five-year program to provide needed equipment for some forty missions and ten institutions of the Church in the diocese.

He said: "Some of the five-year pledges have paid more than one-fifth, and in a few instances have paid their entire five-year pledge. We have appropriated the receipts for this year, and we are paying on the allocations as building contracts proceed."

Specific instances of appropriations are:

The Episcopal Hospital, for a new dispensary on which work will start in the near future, and will enable the hospital to triple its service in the northeast industrial section.

Galilee Mission, completion of its new Industrial Department to help solve the problem of employment for unfortunate men while trying to rehabilitate their lives.

Home for Consumptives, Chestnut Hill, completion of a new addition to the Nurses Home to enable the home to do a larger public service, and completion of a Superintendent's House.

The Church Farm School, Glen Loch, where more than one hundred boys are being educated, reduction by $25,000 of a burdensome mortgage and indebtedness on buildings.

The Sheltering Arms, for needed improvements at its new home at "Ravenswood", Germantown.

Acquirement of four new mission sites at Rhawnhurst in the northeast section of the city.

First units of parish buildings for the Ascension Mission at Rhawnhurst and at St. George's Mission, East Venango and Edgemont Streets, are under construction.

Completion of parish buildings for St. Barnabas', Germantown, and Trinity, Collingdale, and announcement that preparations are concluded for a church for the Redeemer Mission at Springfield in Delaware County, and for a Parish House for St. Mary's, Chester.

The Bishop also announced that part payment had been made on the one hundred and sixty acres acquired for a cathedral site at State College in the building of which the other dioceses in the state also are sharing.

In addition, the Bishop said that $72,404 had been sent to the National Council in fulfillment of promises made by the diocese to help the Central Church.

Church Mission of Help.

Maryland has just established a branch of the Church Mission of Help, a social service organization within the Church dealing with the problems of wayward youth, delinquency, conduct and behavior, and illegitimacy.

The work is under the supervision of a Diocesan Board of Directors of which Rev. S. Tagart Steele, D. D., is president. Miss Maria F. Martin, who received her training at the Pennsylvania School of Social and Health Work, and who later had wide experience under the Church Mission of Help in New York, has been appointed Executive Secretary.

Bishop Murray's appreciation of the value of Church Mission of Help, has led to its establishment in Maryland, the sixteenth diocese to organize a C. M. H. unit.

DELAWARE.

Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D., Bishop.

St. George's Church, Indian River.

St. George's Church, Indian River, is one of the most interesting rural congregations in this diocese and this part of the country. For a good deal more than a hundred years this Church has been in service. It stands in the open country miles from the nearest center of population. It is under the care of the Rev. M. Paul S. Huntington. During the summer and chiefly under the direction of Mr. D. Burton, the treasurer, who gathered the funds necessary, a very considerable amount of money was spent in repairs and restoration of the building. On the afternoon of October 30, the Bishop visited the parish and was assisted in the service by the Rev. M. Paul S. Huntington, the Rev. S. D. Van Loan, of Georgetown, and the Rev. Joseph S. Hinks, of Lewis. A congregation of several hundred gathered and so crowded the building that many had to stand through the service. Great interest and enthusiasm was expressed for these improvements which were carried out chiefly by the lay members of the congregation and completed while the priest in charge was temporarily away from his work. The old church will continue to go on serving God and His people as it has done for so many years in the past.

St. Mark's, Millsboro.

Mr. J. Riese White has been appointed Superintendent of the Church School. He succeeds Mr. Joseph C. Ellis, who served as Superintendent for forty years—a remarkable record of fidelity to a most important post.

The hour of the Sunday morning service has been changed to eleven o'clock.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Church School Service League.

The annual diocesan meeting of the Church School Service League will be held in St. Margaret's Church, December 10. This meeting will begin with an opening service conducted by the girls of the Wednesday Club. A business meeting, with reports will follow this, after which a typical study period will be conducted by Commander C. T. Jewell, Director of the Parish Branch, with "Social Service in the Community" as his subject.

This will be followed by a business meeting of the Diocesan Organization, and at this time reports of all branches of the diocese will be heard. Posters, illustrating the work of the Church in Liberia, which have been made in competition, will be judged and prizes awarded at this time.

A dramatization of the Biblical Story of Ruth by members of the pageantry group of St. Margaret's League and a social hour for the children, with refreshments, will close the meeting. All Sunday-school children and their teachers are invited to be present.

Toc H.

Activities and interests of Toc H, anywhere, make a special appeal to many Church people in Washington, because it was in Washington that Toc H first became established in this country. The celebration in London, therefore, on December 3, of the twelfth birthday of Toc H, when three thousand former service men gathered to pay tribute to its power and beauty, will make its impression on Toc H and those interested here as everywhere.

At an evening service, the Prince of Wales lit "Lamps of Maintenance" for new overseas groups of Toc H in Bombay, Calcutta, Colombo, Nadias, Durbau and Johannesburg, and other features of the birthday festival were a thanksgiving service in Westminster Abbey and special services in many of the London Churches.

Deaconesses.

Two Deaconesses have recently come to this diocese. Miss M. E. Van Varick was placed by the Bishop in charge of the boys of the Anson Dodge Home on St. Simon's Island, which was burned last summer. The inmates, who have been housed in two comfortable cottages, recently completed, have been kept in health and comfort entirely through the efforts of Deaconess Van Varick.

Early in the fall Deaconess Ruth E. Byliesby, of Rovbury, Conn., came to join the staff of Christ Church Mission, Augusta, which is now in charge of the Rev. Jackson H. Harris, rector of the Church of the Atonement, Deaconess Byliesby was formerly stationed in Augusta, and so is well acquainted with both the people and the needs. Her specialty is kindergarten work, and a room in the parish house has been fitted up for her use in this field. Her calling has naturally led her into other activities which she has taken hold of with interest and skill.

Children's Corner.

The first "Children's Corner" in this diocese was dedicated to the Glory of God and in memory of Pattie Thomas McGlohon in St. Paul's Church, Savannah, the Rev. S. B. McGlohon, rector. Miss McGlohon was both a pupil ond a teacher of the school, and was taken to her reward last summer in early womanhood. The "corner" is fitted to conform to the standard of the children's corner, with a tiny prayer desk, and a table with a lamp and literature.

Rare Lace.

An exquisite lace cloth, which Professor Blain Schick, of the Department of Romance Languages, of the University of Kentucky, Lexington, Kentucky, found upon the battlefields of France, has been presented by him to the Church of the Good Shepherd, Lexington, Kentucky, and is now used upon the altar of this church.

Professor Schick found the cloth while seeking shelter in an old church near the Chateau Thierry battlefield. Sewing the lace in his tunic, he carried it in this way through the war.

Realizing that the cloth came from a church, the Professor felt that it should be returned to one.

Bishop Tuttle Memorial.

On Sunday afternoon, November 27, the cornerstone of the Bishop Tuttle Memorial, St. Louis, was laid by the Bishop of Missouri. The Memorial, of which seven stories comprising the first unit, is now being erected, adjoins Christ Church Cathedral, and will be the center of diocesan, parish and community work. It is intended later to erect additional stories and a tower. Bishop Johnson in his address called attention to the fact that the campaign to raise funds for the Memorial was participated in by Roman Catholics, Jews, Protestants and men of no faith, so dearly was Bishop Tuttle loved in St. Louis.

Rt. Rev. F. W. Sterrett, D. D., Coadiutor.

Consecration.

On November 15, Bishop Sterrett consecrated Epiphany Church, Glenburn, the Rev. F. P. Houghton, rector.

Epiphany is our youngest parish. It is just a few years since it was started as a mission in a school house.

The Rev. Mr. Houghton was the first missionary and has demonstrated what can be done in a rural community, if one understands and consecrates himself.

The consecration of the church was the last official act of the rector. Immediately afterward he went to his new parish, St. John's, Lancaster.

FLORIDA.

Rt. Rev. F. A. Juhan, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop Entertained.

On a recent visit to Trinity Church, Apalachicola, Bishop Juhan was entertained at a supper, served in the rectory by the Young People's Service League. At this gathering, the Bishop made an address to the young people and then showed them the diocesan moving pictures of their own activities at Camp Weed last summer.

Offerings.

On Thanksgiving Day, the congregation of St. Peter's Church, Fernandina, presented the Bishop of the diocese with an offering, which completely wipes out a debt of $2,700, of long standing. The Rev. Harris Mallinckrodt is doing a splendid work in this parish.

St. Philip's Church, Jacksonville, the only Colored Parish in this diocese, presented the Bishop recently with an offering of $875, which covers a debt of long standing in this congregation. This parish has for its rector the Rev. T. T. Pollard, who came to Jacksonville only a few months ago.

Rt Rev. H. B. Delaney, D. D., Suffragan

Lay Evangelism.

With the intention of emphasizing the value and necessity of lay evangelism in the Church four conferences on Evangelism were held in November in this diocese, as follow-up work of the Bishops' Crusade. The leaders of the conferences included Bishop Darst, Chairman of the National Commission; Bishop Penick, and Mr. Leon C. Palmer, of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. The conferences in Charlotte, Greensboro, Raleigh and Rocky Mount, were largely attended, and at each place the laymen committed themselves to a program of greater evangelistic effort.

For the Deaf.

The young people of the Sunday Schools of the Diocese of North Carolina, will again devote their Advent and Epiphany offerings to the work among the Deaf. The salary of the missionary to the Deaf, the Rev. Roma C. Fortune, of Durham, will be paid from this fund. The Rev. F. H. Craighill, of Rocky Mount, is chairman of the campaign to secure the offering this year.

Educational Institute.

A week's educational institute was held in Raleigh, November 14-19, and a series of one-day institutes were held at different places the following week in this diocese, for the purpose of arousing interest in better instruction in the Sunday Schools. The Rev. H. W. Starr, Ph. D., of Charleston, S. C.; Miss Annie Morton Stout, a worker in the Province of Sewanee; Mrs. H. M. Bonner and Mrs. F. N. Challen, of North Carolina, were leaders.

Collect for Third Sunday in Advent.

O Lord Jesus Christ, Who at Thy first coming didst send Thy messenger to prepare Thy way before Thee; Grant that the ministers and stewards of Thy mysteries may likewise so prepare and make ready Thy way, by turning the hearts of the disobedient to the wisdom of the just, that at Thy second coming to judge the world we may be found an acceptable people in Thy sight, who liveth and reignest with the Father and the Holy Spirit ever, one God, world without end. Amen.

The Ministers.

It is the Holy Sabbath Day and all the whole world round,
Wherever human sorrow or human need is found,
Wherever men crave sympathy or seek the light of day,
The ministers are going forth to preach and teach and pray.

Some of them are men of might and speak with silver tongue,
And some are weak and slow of sight and are no longer young.
Some go by twos and three to serve the needy ones at home,
While on far trails and perilous, some bravely go alone.

So all about the world they go on glad and willing feet,
And always they tell lovingly the Story, old and sweet;
Though here or there some minister may be misunderstood,
The one great motive urges all—to help the world be good.

And when I think of all of these who on each Sabbath day
Go swift to teach a needy world to live and love and pray,
Of these who serve and give their all, though some perhaps may fail,
I can but think that righteousness will speedily prevail.

—Frances C. Hopkins.

"The Mother of Our Lord."

(In Two Parts.)

Among all the influences of home there is none more powerful than that of motherhood. It is the moulding and inspiring force in tender and impressionable years. "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world." In that bold line there is a deal of truth. The mother's shadow falling across the cradle is a shadow of blessing or of woe. When the eyes are opening, when the heart is softest, when the little will is yet unformed—what a tremendous influence the mother wields. There comes a time with the advance of years when the impress of the father is determinative. The strength and masculine energy of fatherhood will be needed then to guide and to control. But in the opening days, when the child is but a babe—when life is fresh, and when the world is wonderful—it is the love of motherhood more than that of fatherhood that interprets and conveys the love of God.

Now, if that be so with every infant you may be certain it was so with Jesus. All that a mother ever meant for you, that His mother must have meant for Him. He was born of a woman, made under the law. Did you ever link these words together? Is not the first law we show in life the gentle and controlling law of motherhood? And so our Lord, who on the cross of Calvary fulfilled the eternal law of God for us, began by obedience to the law of motherhood. He was as helpless. He was as dependent, as any other little babe in Nazareth. He hung upon His mother's breast as really as afterwards He hung upon the Cross. And how He was moulded in these childish years by the love and sweetness and patience of His mother we shall never understand, in all its fullness, till we cast our crowns down at His feet. How could we better spend our Christmas Sunday, then, than by thinking for a little about Mary? It is thus that we can join the angel song, "Hail, thou that art highly favored among women". What do we know of her, what can we learn of her, as we read the simple tale of the evangelist? It is on that I should like to speak.

I think the chief thing to impress us about Mary is just the obscurity in which she walks. The days and months and years go hurrying by, and of Mary there is scarce a trace. That our Lord has never ceased to love her tenderly we know from that memorable moment at the Cross. Amid the agonies of that last hour He saw her: "Woman, behold thy son—behold thy mother." And yet, though He had never ceased to love her, and she had never ceased to love her son, she lives and moves and loves behind a veil. Is it not often so in human life? The things that are dearest are the hidden things. The hands that bless us and the hearts that pray for us are hands and hearts of which the world knows nothing. Happy the life with a background such as that, where there is some one always true and loving, some one whose influence is not less real because it is hidden from the prying eye. Wordsworth has written with infinite contempt of the man who would peep and botanize upon his mother's grave. And a mother's love is like a mother's grave—it is too sacred for the light of day. And that is why Mary in her perfect motherhood is never flaunted on the Gospel page, but moves behind a veil and in obscurity. When one thinks of the place that has been given to Mary in the worship of the Roman Catholic Church; when one thinks of her exalted and conspicuous—the queen of heaven, the celestial rose—one feels that the charm of motherhood is gone. That public throne is not a mother's throne. That glittering crown is not a mother's crown. Motherhood on earth is not like that; neither is perfected motherhood in heaven. All the splendor and show of mariolatry is not half so true to what we know of motherhood as is the sweet obscurity of Scripture.

And yet if we were to think that this obscurity were the penalty of lack of gifts or character—if we were to think of Mary as a characterless woman, we should be utterly untrue to Scripture. Mary was a woman of a very beautiful character, a woman of a most uncommon nature. There are people of whom you would never hear, though they had the ancestry of David; people predestined to obscurity as others are predestined to renown. But whatever the virgin was she was not that—she was a womon of most uncommon gifts, with all her quietness she had a strength of character which has got itself written upon the Gospel page. Think of the journey she took to see her cousin. It was a toilsome and a perilous journey. For a young betrothed maiden such as she was, it was a course of action without precedent. For a Jewish maiden when she was betrothed was not expected to go much abroad; she was expected to stay modestly at home. Here was a woman, then, who had the gift of courage, and with the gift of courage she had the gift of song. Many a mother has the gift of song; Mary had it in pre-eminence. Here was one of those rare and rounded natures that not only meet life's difficulties bravely, but set the difficulties of the day to music. Two things always impress me in our Lord: the one is His courage, the other is His poetry. Christ was unfalteringly brave, and yet He was a poet to His finger-tips. And it tells us how perfectly He was a human child, drawing His human life from her who bore Him, when these are the qualities we find in Mary. A woman who could act as Mary acted—a woman who could sing as Mary sang—had energy and gifts to make her famous had she any desire to be famous. But Mary had no desire to be famous. She did not want to be the queen of heaven. She wanted to be the mother and the queen of her little growing family at Nazareth.

Now a woman who could so obliterate herself must have been a woman of singular humility. And there are several traces in the narrative that confirms the humility of Mary. Think, for instance, of the Annunciation. There is a picture of the Annunciation, by Rossetti, which I suppose many of you have seen. In it Mary is cowering away, and there is a look of terror in her eyes. But the greatest painters, like Angelico, never paint her with a look like that. They paint her as if she never thought of self at all. Think of the words that came welling from her heart when she knew she was to be the mother of Messiah. In a single moment she was lifted up into pre-eminence and immortality. Yet the one thought that rises in her heart is not that she shall be worshipped or admired—"all generations", she says, "shall call me blessed". She did not want to be great or to be beautiful—she had no selfish ambitions of that kind. She did not want to have the praise of men, or to be the attraction of a million eyes. Mary's one passion was to be a blessing—Mary's one thought that filled her heart with song was that to weary men and burdened women the world would be different when Christ was born. A woman who could so forget herself was a woman of a singular humility. You will not find her often in the Gospels. She will do nothing to attract attention. For the truest humility is not humiliation, nor any abject disparagement of self. It is never to think about oneself at all.—Dr. E. H. Morrison, D. D., Glasgow.

In Me Ye Shall Have Peace!

...g days and nights upon this restless bed,
Of daily, nightly weariness and pain!—
Yet Thou art here, my ever-gracious Lord,
Thy well-known voice speaks not to me in vain—
"In Me ye shall have peace!"

The darkness seemeth long, and even the light
No respite brings with it; no soothing rest
For this worn frame; yet in the midst of all Thy love revives. Father, Thy will is best,
"In Me ye shall have peace!"

Sleep cometh not, when most I seem to need
Its kindly balm. O Father, be to me
Better than sleep; and let these sleepless hours
Be hours of blessed fellowship with Thee.
"In Me ye shall have peace!"

Not always seen the wisdom and the love;
And sometimes hard to be believed, when pain
Wrestles with faith and almost overcomes.
Yet even in conflict Thy sure words sustain—
"In Me ye shall have peace!"

Father, the flesh is weak; fain would I rise
Above its weakness into things unseen.
Lift thou me up; give me the open ear,
To hear the voice that speaketh from within—
"In Me ye shall have peace!"

Father, the hour is come; the hour when I Shall with these fading eyes behold Thy face;
And drink in all the fulness of Thy love;
Till then, oh, speak to me Thy words of grace—
"In Me ye shall have peace!"

The above poem is believed to be the last ever written by Dr. Horatio Bonar and was found amongst his papers after his death.

Confidence in God.

God is not only directing history to an end which He contemplate, and which will be the explanation and justification of His slow, and sometimes hard dealing with us now, He is altering the very nature of man's experience. This is to be borne in mind. History is not the gradual unfolding of the implications of natural life; the future is not to be measured by the powers and forces implicit in the world at the present moment. God is at work upon the world. The hope of men lies in Him. The world is spiritually controlled. He can give us power of which we had not reckoned. He can bring new factors to bear upon our situation, and discover to us forces which we did not know. Such a new factor was Christ Himself. The essential difference between Christian hopefulness and ordinary optimism is that Christian hope can give an adequate account of itself. It believes from its experience of what God has done that He can do still more. When man's resources are at an end, there is still God to be counted upon. In this Advent season there is nothing we need so much to recover as the conviction of God's transforming power. Our preparation for the season, and for the coming of Christ with which it sends, ought to begin with a thoughtful and prayerful consideration of the implication of our belief in God.—Rev. Stanley Brown—Sermon in the Living Church.

Advent Lessons From Bethlehem.

He was the first Christmas present. That He should be born of a virgin was wonderful, but not so wonderful as the fact that He should be incarnated at all. When we question the Virgin Birth of Christ we question the veracity of Matthew and Luke, deny the fulfillment of prophecy (Genesis 3:15), Isa. 7:14), and consequently assail the inspiration of the Bible, strip Christ of His spotlessness and His Deity, and thereby nullify the atoning work on the cross.

The greatest lesson to be learned is the purpose of His coming into this world of sin. "He was manifested to take away our sins; and in Him is no sin . . . . For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that He might destroy the works of the devil."—1 John 3:5-8.

"But when the fulness of time was come, God sent forth His Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons."—Galatians 4:4-5.

"Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also Himself likewise took part of the same; that through death He might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil."—Hebrews 2:14.—Rev. V. V. Morgan.

A Real Witness For Christ.

"He held the Lamp each Sababth day
So low that none could miss the way,
And yet so high to bring in sight
That picture fair—of Christ, the Light—
That gazing up—the Lamp between—
The hand that held it was not seen.

"He held the Pitcher, stooping low,
To lips of little ones below,
Then raised it to the weary saint
And bade him drink when sick and faint;
They drank—the Pitcher thus between—
The hand that held it scarce was seen.

"He blew the Trumpet, soft and clear,
That trembling sinners need not fear,
And then with louder note and bold
To storm the walls of Satan's hold,
The Trumpet coming thus between,
The hand that held it was not seen.

"But when our Captain says: 'Well done,
Thou good and faithful servant. Come,
Lay down the Pitcher and the Lamp,
Lay down the Trumpet; leave the camp,
His weary hands will then be seen,
Clasped in Christ's pierced ones, naught between."

A Farewell.

Word has just been received by the Japanese Ambassador in Washington, Honorable T. Matsudaira, that the "friendship dolls", which are being sent by the Japanese children to the children of America, were given an elaborate farewell ceremony in Tokyo on November 4.

The ceremony was attended, according to the message received from Tokyo, by Viscount Shibusawa and the American Ambassador, Honorable Charles MacVeagh, both of whom made addresses on the maintenance of friendly relations between Japan and the United States.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, to which the friendship dolls are being sent as a response to the sending of 13,000 American dolls to the Japanese Doll Festival last March as ambassadors of goodwill from the children of America, is now making plans for a public reception to the representative of Japan who has been officially appointed to convey the dolls to America.

The full message received from the Foreign Office in Tokyo is as follows:

"Fifty-eight Japanese dolls(one representing all Japan) were exhibited at the principal department store in Tokyo from October 29, before being sent by Japanese children as a return courtesy to America, and the exhibit was viewed by the public with great enthusiasm.

"On November 4, the dolls were given a farewell party at the Japanese Y. M. C. A. in the compound of the Meiji Shrine, under the auspices of the Japanese National Committee on World Friendship among Children. Princesses Kitashirakawa, Asaka, Takeda and Tokue graciously attended, as did many prominent gentlemen and about 2,000 children.

"After singing the national anthems of the two countries, the children representative of both countries exchanged greetings and handshakes and then joined in singing the Dolls' Farewell Song, especially composed for the occasion by the Department of Education.

"In conclusion, Baron Shibusawa and the American Ambassador delivered addresses on the promotion of friendship between Japan and America, thus closing a most successful meeting."

Faith.

An honored and dear teacher, Josiah Royce, whose latter years were beshadowed by sorrow and torn by the most atrocious suffering, hammered out of his pain these words: Faith is finding in ourselves and in God that which enables us to endure and triumph over anything that life or death can do to us.

Here is high courage and deep insight; it is what Jesus meant when, standing in the shadow of the Cross—the cup of Death pressed to the lips of Love—He said to His disciples in their dismay: Fear not, I have overcome the world; meaning that He had faced the worst and found the best, and that there is nothing to fear.

Some call it religion; others call it by other names. No matter; he who wins this victory has found the Pearl of Great Price. Into the Shadow our Lord went, and found the Master Light of all our seeing; in the Mystery of the Cross was revealed the meaning of Life. O my soul, remember!—Joseph Fort Newton.

Bishop Brent's Early Choice.

I do not recall an instant of my life when I aspired to any vocation excepting that of the ministry, but on one brief occasion when I faced the possibility of becoming a musician. As a boy at school, the ministry seemed to me the one vocation worth considering. My most recent reflections confirm my earliest. I know nothing that is worthy of comparison with the ministry. Were I again on the threshold of life, I would choose as I have chosen As a youth, other walks of life, excepting music alone, held no attraction for me.—From a Sermon by Bishop Brent on the twenty-fifth anniversary of his consecration.

A man who regularly and sincerely pays his vows to God will never dodge paying his bills.—Rev. Wm. Porkess.

For the Young Folks

He Cometh.

Softly He cometh,
This King;
No sound on the mountains afar;
No herald save one silent star;
Nor highway with triumph to rin!

Lowly He cometh,
This King;
No robes of purple and gold;
No pageantry royal and bold;
No banner its glory to fling!

Meekly He cometh,
This King;
To sit in our earth-shade of woe;
To wear our humanity, so may
That souls in their sonship sing!

Quickly He cometh,
This King;
Lord, even so!—longing, we wait
Outside of the pearl-builded gate.
Till Thou our glad welcome shall bring Thou—Brother and Saviour,
And King!

Christmas Obligations.

"I must begin my Christmas shopping tomorrow." Annabel heaved a sigh.

"You don't seem very happy over the prospect," Aunt Tabitha observed as she glanced up from her sewing. All of Aunt Tabitha's Christmas presents were comfortable garments which she made with her own needle, and she seemed to enjoy the service very much.

"Well, no, I can't say that I am exactly happy over the prospect,' Annabel admitted thoughtfully, as she looked down her list. "You see, I can't sew as well as you can, and even if I could, there'd be no way of meeting all this formidable list of names."

"What names, my dear?" Aunt Tabitha inquired wonderingly.

"Oh, the people who come under my head of Christmas obligations, the girls, to whom I am absolutely compelled to give a Chrsitmas present. You see, I've so many friends at school, and I met so many lovely girls at camp last summer. We've been corresponding ever since, and they're sure to send me something, so I just have to send them something."

"Let me see your list," said Aunt Tabitha with increasing interest. She read forty-three names twenty-eight of whom lived in the same town in which Annabel had always lived. "So you feel that you must send each one of these a Christmas present," Aunt Tabitha observed.

"Well, if I didn't send them anything, and they should remember me, I would feel very much embarrassed," Annabel declared

"Why not send them Christmas remembrances rather than gifts?" the old lady suggested, as she continued with her sewing. Annabel looked at her wonderingly and she added: "You do very pretty water color work. The cards you made for the places at Hester's dinner party were quite pretty. Why not make some Christmas cards, containing happy wishes and send them out to your friends?"

"Oh, Auntie," Annabel laughed. "You are so old-fashioned. Don't you know that people give presents now-a-days with the expectation of receiving others in return; that it is all just a sort of exchange system, and that the old-fashioned truly Christmas spirit has gone out? Why, if I sent just cards, particularly home-made cards, to those girls who send me gifts, they'd laugh at me, and throw the cards away."

"No, my dear," Aunt Tabitha continued to smile over her needle-work, "I do not believe that at all. I think that this is the same good, old-fashioned world that I lived in when I was your age. I believe that human nature is the same, and that people still have hearts and souls, and love Christmas cheer. I think you young folk have just fallen into a sort of mutual mistake, from which you would all love to be extricated, only you don't know how. Let me suggest a way out."

"What is your suggestion?" Annabel asked interestedly.

"Make very pretty cards with an individual wish for each of your friends. You made the twenty cards for Hester's party in one afternoon. Working a while for several afternoons you can get them ready. To your out-of-town friends just send a message of love; to your friends who live here write an invitation to meet here at your house for a cup of tea one afternoon close to Christmas day. I'll get up the refreshments for you. When you've gotten your crowd together, have the courage to get up and make a move that instead of exchanging Christmas gifts this year, all of you band together to make somebody else happy. Each young lady must find a child for whom Christmas may not come as it comes for our children, bring that child here Christmas Day, and we'll have a tree for them. Each girl may contribute the amount, or less, than she expected to put in the others' gifts. I believe, my dear, that you would get happiness as well as scatter it that way."

Annabel did not agree at once to her aunt's suggestion. She was tired and sleepy so she went up to her room, but that night she had a dream of little children who were out in the streets shivering in the cold and gazing wistfully through lighted windows at Christmas toys and beautiful Christmas trees, and she was standing in the midst of the Christmas array, and the pale-faced, wide-eyed children were holding their hands up to her appealingly. Next morning she remembered the dream clearly, and also she remembered what her aunt had said to her. It was Saturday and so she did not go to school. She had planned to begin her Christmas shopping that day. Instead she shut herself up in her room with her paints and brushes. By night she had finished more than half of her Christmas cards. She called Aunt Tabitha up to see them, and that dear old lady was so happy that tears stood in her eyes. Each card contained a tender wish of Christmas cheer, and those that were for school mates an invitation to meet at her house the next Saturday afternoon.

Every invitation was accepted, and Aunt Tabitha seemed just to try herself on those cookies. They were crisp and fragrant and melting. And the tea was the kind she, alone, seemed to know how to make. There was also home-made candy for the girls to pull, and they had great fun. Then Annabel, summoning up a deal of courage, arose from her place at the tea table and began to speak. She laid before her friends the plan her aunt had suggested, and when she sat down, there were at least three voices seconding her motion. The agreement was unanimous, and the girls got to work at once on their plans.

That Christmas Day was a very happy one. But it was hard to tell who was happier—the children who were brought to the bountifully-laden tree, or the band of girls who furnished the gifts that adorned the boughs.

"I feel," said Annabel that night to Aunt Tabitha as they sat before the glowing fire, "I feel that more than ever before I've met my Christmas obligations."—The Presbyterian Advance.

A Talk With Santa Claus.

On a plush sofa in a great room lighted by the soft glow of lamps hidden in shades that looked like flowers a little boy was sitting quietly by himself. He was so small that his legs stuck out straight before him, because they were not long enough to reach to the floor. There were many other people in the room, most of them women, some of them leading children by the hand, but none of them said anything to the little boy, or even looked at him. He was lonely, for it was the week before Christmas, and his mother had brought him to the city to see the Christmas trees and the toys in the shop windows; but after going to many places where there had been no toys or Christmas trees she had brought him to this great room and bid him wait until she came.

It seemed to him that he had waited a long time, and it was hard, for on their way to the big room they had passed through crowds of people and between long counters full of sleds and carts and toy cannon and ships and fire engines, and he wanted to look at them so that he could tell Santa Claus what to bring him. He was thinking what he should ask for and wishing that his mother would come, when in at the door walked a figure that made him hold his breath. It was the figure of a tall old man dressed in red trimmed with white. On his feet were great boots that came to his knees, and on his head a tall peaked cap with a tassel that fell over on one side. His face was covered with a long white beard in which bits of frost sparkled and through which showed a pair of laughing eyes. The little boy knew at once that it must be Santa Claus.

After standing a moment in this doorway the tall figure in red caught sight of the little boy and came over and sat down beside him and laid a hand on his head. "Well," it said, "are you thinking of what you are going to give Santa Claus this year?"

"No, sir," said the little boy, "I was thinking of what I should ask Santa Claus to give me. And you are Santa Claus! I know, because I have seen pictures of you; but I have never seen you before, and I've always had to write about what I wanted, and I can't write very well, except when my mother helps me. But now I can tell you without writing!" And then he began to name the different things that he wanted.

Santa Claus heard him through, but when he had finished he said: "I see that you think I am very rich, and that I can give a good child anything that he wants. Has no one ever told you how poor I am—that I have nothing of my own: no home, no money, no food even, except what kind-hearted people give me?"

The little boy looked at him with eyes wide with wonder. "Poor, sir?" he said. "Why, I thought you were the richest man in the world! I thought that everything that comes to anybody at Christmas came from you. They always told me so."

"Yes," said Santa Claus, "they told you only what is true. It does come through me, but not from me. It comes from those who know me and what I do and who help me do it. Did you know that there are hundreds of little boys in this city who have no stockings to keep their feet warm and no shoes to keep them dry, that there are little girls who never had a doll and who go to bed hungry every night? And there are other cities in this country where it is the same, and in other countries too, and I must care for all of them. Even if I were the richest man in the world, as you thought, I could not do it alone; but I am happy in having thousands, yes, hundreds of thousands, of helpers."

"Can any one at all help?" asked the little boy.

"Yes, any one at all can help. I carry this for those who wish to help," and he held up a tin box that had a narrow slit in the top, and shook it until what was in it jingled.

The little boy slid to the floor and put his hand deep down into his pocket. When he drew it out there was a bright new half-dollar in it—the half-dollar that his aunt had given him that morning to spend all for himself; and without once looking at it he pushed it quickly into the slit in the tin box that Santa Claus held out to him; and because he was thinking so hard he did not even see that his mother had come into the room and was looking at him.

"I thank you, sir," said Santa Claus and made him a low bow. "You have helped me to send some stockings to a little boy that I know. When Christmas comes I shall try to remember."

And when Christmas did come the little boy found not only that Santa Claus had remembered but that there must have been money enough in the tin box to buy shoes and stockings for those who needed them and to leave something over for other things.—Youth's Companion.

Robber, the Hermit Crab.

Down at the edge of a pretty little rock pool, among the waving seaweeds, lives Robber, the Hermit Crab. He is not as friendly a little fellow as Tiny Fiddler Crab. No, siree! It certainly looks to me as if Robber went about making enemies instead of friends.

But, that may not be! Perhaps the Hermit Crab family understand each other so well, that they really don't mind having other Hermits take their homes away from them.

For that is just what happens. No sooner does a Hermit Crab get a nice, comfortable, new home for himself, than another one will want it. Then the trouble starts.

Now all of the Hermit Crabs' bodies are soft and unprotected, and are safe from hungry birds and fish only when covered by a strong shell.

When Robber was very tiny, and as soon as he understood what to do, he crawled into an empty shell and called it his home.

As he grew bigger, he needed larger shells, so he kept changing from one to another. Perhaps he came upon another Hermit Crab who was living in a shell just the size Robber thought he needed. Do you suppose he went up politely and asked for it?

I am sorry to say he did not. He rushed at the crab, and grabbed his big claw with his. Over and over they rolled and kicked and bumped and clattered. They snapped and pinched and made jabs at one another. They bubbled at their funny mouths in their anger.

Finally, Robber, who was very determined, jerked the other fellow from his shell, and as quick as a wink, he jumped into it. Just as quickly did the other crab jump into Robber's shell. He clattered off bubbling and foaming. If he did not like his home, he, too, would find another.

And all this time, you should have seen Glider, the Sea Gull, sailing round and round looking on. You should have seen the fish swimming nearer and nearer, ready to snap up the tender morsels. If the two little crabs had not been able to move quicker than eyes could see, they would have been swallowed by either, while they were out of their shells.

As soon as the battle was over, Robber placed his big claws across his doorway, and went fast asleep. He needed to get rested, for perhaps it would not be long before another Hermit Crab might try to take this shell from him. Then he, too, would have to defend this new home with every bit of strength he had.

The Christian Year In Verse.

Advent tells us Christ is near.
Christmas tells us Christ is here.
In Epiphany we trace
All the glory of His grace.

Those three Sundays before Lent
Will prepare us to repent.
In Lent we may begin
Earnestly to mourn for sin.

Holy Week and Easter, then,
Tell who died and rose again;
Of that Happy Easter Day,
"Christ is risen indeed!" we say.

Yes, and Christ ascended, too,
To prepare a place for you.
So we give Him special praise
After those great Forty Days.

Then He sent the Holy Ghost
On the day of Pentecost,
With us to always abide,
Well may we keep Whitsuntide.

Last of all we humbly sing,
Glory to Our God and King,
Glory to the One in Three,
On the Feast of Trinity.

The Timid Chicken.

Brownie was a timid chicken that went half fed because he let his sisters and brothers push him aside when they scrambled for their food. He would hop about in an uncertain way, make a half-hearted start for a grain of corn or a morsel of meal, and then if another chicken happened to go toward it, Brownie would run quickly away.

Agnes found him moping in one corner of the barnyard with rumpled feathers and drooping head. "Poor little Brownie!" she said. "Don't you get enough to eat?" But Brownie never noticed her. "He's just starving to death," she told her Uncle Ned, who came with her to look at the chicken. "If I try to feed him," she continued, "the others come flocking around, and then he runs away. I'm afraid poor Brownie will die. Do you suppose he's sick, Uncle Ned?"

"No," answered her uncle; "but he might as well be as to be scared all the time. What Brownie needs is a little faith in himself. He's too meek. He lets the other chickens run over him."

"Poor Brownie!" sighed Agnes. "I hate to see him going hungry. Can't we do something for him?"

"Of course we can," answered Uncle Ned. "Just give him a few lessons in self-respect. We'll teach him to have confidence in himself. But, first of all, we'll give him a good, square meal."

So Brownie was driven into a corner. Then Uncle Ned scared the other chickens away, and Agnes fed the half-starved chicken.

Brownie was hungry; but he pecked with a beating heart and startled glances, for he did not know how soon some of the other chickens would bear down upon him and steal his breakfast. But for the first time in days he got a full meal, and it seemed to make him feel a little livelier.

"Now, we'll leave him till dinnertime," said Uncle Ned.

"But he must be so lonesome, moping in a corner," grieved Agnes. "I'd like to take him to the house and keep him in a basket."

"I wouldn't do that," said her uncle. "To much handling isn't good for chickens. Brownie isn't suffering any now. He'll be all right."

At noon they went again to feed the timid chicken and his brothers and sisters.

Uncle Ned called the chickens as he carried their corn in a pan, and they ran after him. Even Brownie started, too, but got picked at and jostled, and then hopped back to his corner.

Then Uncle Ned called the chickens toward Brownie, and they crowded about their timid brother; but he led them away again, and this time they forgot Brownie, for they had their backs to him, and ran after the corn that rattled in the pan. And Brownie, seeing the others running from him, ran after them. Then as Uncle Ned led them farther away, the timid chicken began to chase them in earnest, for he seemed to think that they were running away from him.

Agnes and her uncle practiced this way with Brownie for several days, and he soon got so much courage that he ate with the others. If one picked at him, he would pick back; if he was run against, he only pressed closer to the feed. And instead of being a frightened, half-fed chicken, Brownie grew fat and brave, and was able to take care of himself.

"But I don't see yet," said Agnes, "just why having the other chickens run away from Brownie should make him any braver."

"Because," answered her uncle, "he saw them running, and it looked as though they were afraid of him, so he began to have courage and believe in himself. He had the strength to get his food all the time, but he didn't know it."—Children's Visitors.

The Tale of Seven Little Pigs.

It was pouring rain. But Hal took an umbrella and started out to look for Old Ironsides. Old Ironsides is a sow, a big, fine Hampshire sow, sleek and black, with a neat white band around her middle and a thrifty little curl in her tail. Hal is very proud of her. She has taken a whole string of blue ribbons at the county fair. And so, on that blustery March morning, when she did not come to breakfast when Hall called, he was worried and set out to find her. He looked first in the rye field, but she was not there. Then he looked way down on the river bank, but she was not there. The wind buffeted him about and tugged at his umbrella the rain kept pouring down, but he kept looking. He searched through the rape field (Old Ironsides was very fond of rape), but still no glimpse did he have of her.

At last he struck out through the wood lot, looking carefully in the thickets and brier patches. But still he didn't find her. A branch ran through the wood lot, and when Hal came to cross it he saw that the rain had made it too wide to jump. He walked along down one side of it, looking for a narrow place, and he passed a fallen hickory log. He heard a sudden grunt and looking around saw Old Ironsides on a pile of dead leaves, close against the log. And Hal's heart thumped loudly when he saw that Old Ironsides was not alone. Oh, no indeed! Far from it! Seven little pigs, as much alike as seven peas in one pod, were snuggled close beside her. They looked exactly like their handsome mother, too. They were sleek and black, with a neat white band about each little middle and a thrifty little curl in each little tail.

All this delighted Hall, of course, but one thing worried him. That was the rain and the branch that was getting wider every minute. If Old Ironsides stayed where she was, the seven little pigs would be sure to drown. Hal was badly bothered. His father was away; there was no one to help him. And taking young pigs away from an old sow is dangerous business. But Hal went to the barn and got some corn and a tow sack. Then he skillfully tolled Old Ironsides down the side of the branch a way, and when she was busily eating corn he slipped back to the bed and very gently put the little pigs inside the sack. He had got six of them in, without any trouble, but when he picked up the seventh little pig he had trouble. The pig gave a loud "Wee-e-e!" and Old Ironsides dropped her corn and came rushing back, her bristles up, her head down, roaring "Woof, woof, woof!" in a terrifying way. She meant to eat Hal up, if she could catch him; and Hal knew it. He grabbed his sack and started running with the six little pigs. Then they began to squeal, Old Ironsides came right him, woofing in a blood-curdling way. Hal saw that he was beaten. He dropped the sack and ran for his life to the barn.

He waited there for an hour or more for Old Ironsides to forget her anger. Then he took some more corn and patiently tolled her and tolled her, an inch at a time, until at last he got her into a stall in the barn. Then he went back to the bed, where all the little pigs had settled down again, and sacked them as before. When he got to the barn with them, they were squealing loudly, and Old Ironsides was woofing at a great rate, and Hal did not dare open the stall door. But he poked them through a crack, one at a time, and soon they were all dry and warm and safe in their straw bed.

But Hal himself was dripping wet from head to heels; he was cold, he was tired, he was hungry. That night when his father came home he told him about it all, he held out his hand to his small, determined son and said: "Shake, old fellow! You've got the kind of stuff in you it takes to make a good hog raiser or a good President either!"—Christian Observer.

TREASURE for Bible Lovers

TREASURES are not always made up of gold and precious stones so that "thieves break in". For defenders of the faith, for Bible students and lovers, there is no greater treasure than a clear unfolding of the Apocalypse. The author of this treasureful book writes with an easy charm, and you will enjoy every minute of reading it. It combines easy reading, a beautiful binding, an author who has mastered the original languages of the Scriptures, and a new but sound approach to an absorbing study.

The Apocalypse of Jesus Christ

Deaths

JOSEPH ALLEN WHEAT.

At his residence in Charlottesville, Va., very suddenly, on Thanksgiving Day, JOSEPH ALLEN WHEAT passed from this life into the life eternal.

The funeral services were held in the Gibson Memorial Chapel, St. Paul's Church, University, on Saturday, the 26th, and the burial was in Thornrose Cemetery, Staunton, Sunday morning, November 27.

"He giveth His beloved sleep."

RESOLUTIONS.

At a meeting of the trustees of the Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia, held in the library at the Seminary on Wednesday, the 9th day of November, 1927, the following minute was adopted by a rising vote, viz.:

The Board of Trustees of the Theological Seminary in Virginia, meeting for the first time after the death of the RIGHT REVEREND WILLIAM CABELL BROWN, D. D., President of the Board of Trustees, desire to place upon the record their sense of loss in the removal of one who gave himself so unselfishly to the service of the Seminary.

It has been, looking over the past, a remarkable thing that those who have served as Presidents of the Board of this School of the Prophets have made, each one, a rich contribution to the welfare of the Seminary.

Bishop Brown brought to the work not only wise judgment, gained in his wide experience as a teacher of theology and as an administrator in the Church, but an unselfish love for the institution and a devotion to all of its interests. We ask the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, that the Board of Trustees of the Theological Seminary in Virginia desire to express to Almighty God their gratitude for the services of the President of the Board of Trustees and for his self-sacrifice in the work. We feel that that work will abide and bear fruit through years to come, and that the name of William Cabell Brown will always be an inheritance to the Seminary.

Resolved, that the Board of Trustees extend to the wife and children of Bishop Brown their loving sympathy in the sorsow that has come to them.

Resolved, that we thank God for the good example of the faith and labors of this true follower of Christ, who has gone to serve in the Church above, and to receive that crown of righteousness that fadeth not away.

Resolved, that the Secretary send to the family of Bishop Brown a copy of this minute, that it be entered upon the records of the Board, and be published in the Church papers of the Dioceses of Virginia and West Virginia.

S. SCOLLAY MOORE,
Secretary.

ORDINATIONS.

On October 18, in St. Bartholomew's Church, St. Petersburg, Fla., the Rt. Rev. John D. Wing, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor of South Florida, advanced the Rev. Gwilym Llewellyn Glendale Thomas to the priesthood. Dean P. S. Gilman, of St. Luke's Cathedral, Orlando, preached the sermon, and the Rev. G. I. Hiller, of Lakeland, presented the candidate. The litany was sung by the Rev. E. A. Edwards, of St. Peter's Church, St. Petersburg. The Rev. William B. Curtis, of St. John's, Tampa, read the Epistle, and the Rev. Father Karaphylis, pastor of the Greek Church in Tarpon Springs, joined with the other priests in the laying on of hands.

On October 30 the Bishop of Minnesota advanced the Rev. Crawford W. Brown to the priesthood in the Church of St. John the Evangelist, St. Paul. The sermon was preached by Bishop Cross, of Spokane, and the candidate was presented by the Rev. F. D. Butler.

The Rev. Mr. Brown continues as assistant at St. John's Church, St. Paul.

In St. James' Cathedral, Fresno, on October 9, William Payne was ordained deacon by the Rt. Rev. L. C. Sanford, D. D., Bishop of San Joaquin. The candidate was presented by the Dean of the Cathedral, the Very Rev. G. R. E. MacDonald, and the sermon was preached by the Ven. A. W. Noel Porter of the Diocese of California.

For the past four years Mr. Payne has been treasurer of the Missionary District, and active as a lay leader on the missionary staff of the district. For at Trinity Missions, Madera, Calif. He the past year he has been lay pastor will continue as vicar of Trinity Mission, with address at 113 Eye Street, Madera.

On November 12, in St. Nathanael's Church, Philadelphia, Bishop Garland ordained to the diaconate William Powell, a communicant of St. Nathanael's and for a number of years Sunday-school superintendent, and Leon A. Shearer, a communicant of St. John's, Norristown. Mr. Powell was presented by the Rev. George R. Miller, rector of St. Nathanael's, and Mr. Shearer by the Rev. James Niblo, rector of St. John's, Norristown. The Rev. Jules L. Prevost, head of the Episcopal Church Country Centre Missions in Bucks county, preached the ordination sermon. Mr. Powell has been appointed by the Bishop to serve at the new Diocesan Mission of St. Joseph's, Marion Square, and Trinity Mission, Gulph Mills. Mr. Shearer has been appointed to serve at New Hope and Solebury, in the Bucks county mission field, under the Rev. Dr. Prevost.

The Rt. Rev. Walter Mitchell, D. D., advanced to the priesthood the Rev. Lewis Sasee, II., in St. John's Church, Bisbee, Arizona, on November 17.

Mr. Sasee, while yet a candidate for the diaconate in the Diocese of Delaware, offered himself for work in Arizona. He was accepted by Bishop Mitchell and ordained deacon in New Jersey. His diaconate has been spent in Bisbee, where he has had charge of St. John's Church beneath temporary assignment waiting the arrival of the Rev. William Cox, of the Church of the Holy Comforter, Richmond, Va. Mr. Sasee has endeared himself to the congregation, and has performed a very successful ministration.

Bishop Mitchell evinced his happiness in this, his first ordering to the priesthood within his diocese.

The Rev. Philip Smith read the litany. The Rev. E. C. Tuthill read the epistle, and the Rev. E. W. Simonson read the gospel. The latter presented Mr. Sasee.

DEATHS.

The Rev. Wilford Lash Robbins, D. D., former dean of the General Theological Seminary, died at his home at Bethel, Maine, Monday, September 5, aged sixty-eight.

The funeral services were conducted by the Rev. Charles L. Gomph, rector of Christ Church, Newark, N. J. Interment was at Woodlawn Cemetery, Boston.

You Know?

That many of the great Bible teachers of the present day were set straight in their knowledge of the Word of God by a little booklet by Dr. C. I. Scofield called

"RIGHTLY DIVIDING THE WORD OF TRUTH"?
(The original Edition)

God has wonderfully used this series of ten lectures, fundamental to a clear understanding of the Bible:

1. The Jew, the Gentile and the Church of God.
2. The Seven Dispensations.
3. The Two Advents.
4. The Two Resurrections.
5. The Five Judgments.
6. Law and Grace.
7. The Believer's Two Natures.
8. The Believer's Standing and State.
9. Salvation and Rewards.
10. Believers and Professors.

God certainly gave us this little book through his servant—not added revelation but Spirit-given interpretation.

Here are a few out of many letters, showing how much this little booklet has helped.

"* * I praise God for its marvelous ministry, and hope you can spread this still further."—C. G. Trumbell, Editor Sunday-School Times.

"To my great loss I did not know the book until late in my ministry."—James M. Gray.

UNDER THE STARS

Under the stars one holy night
  A little Baby was born;
Over his head a star shone bright,
  And glistened 'til the dawn;
And wise men came from far away,
  And shepherds wandered where he lay
Upon his lowly bed of hay,
  Under the stars one night.

Under the stars one blessed night,
  The Christ-Child came to earth.
And through the darkness broke the light
  Of morning at his birth;
And sweet hosannas filled the air,
  And guardian angels watched him where
The Virgin Mother bowed in prayer,
  Under the stars one night.

Under the stars this happy night,
  We wait for him once more;
And seem to see the wondrous sight
  The shepherds saw of yore;
O Baby, born in Bethlehem,
  Come to us as you came to them,
And crown us with love's diadem,
  Under the stars to-night.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

How can a Christian consent to be anxious when his Lord is at hand, and he knows that all his need may be supplied by Christ according to His riches in glory.

We rejoice at Christmas because the Child, Jesus, revealed the secret of God's life and of human life—which is love.

You can even give money to the Church's work, and then fail entirely as a spiritual force; but it is impossible for you to be spiritual and not have your money "talk" for God.—Rev. William Porkess.

Misplaced emphasis is corrected by the touch of Christ. The only place to get the truly spiritual vision of life and service is at the feet of the Saviour.—Dr. J. H. Dunham.

"There is just one Light that never fails, and that Light glows brightest when the Star of Bethlehem shines over the hills and irradiates the earth."

A distinguished missionary statesman declares: "I had rather plant one seed of the life of Christ under the crust of heathen life than to cover the whole crust over with veneer of our social vestiture of Western civilization.

O earth! join heaven's lay;
Let peace abound!
Forever from this day
Echo the sound:

"Glory to God on high,
Good will and peace."
World yield Thy glad reply,
Make wars to cease.
—Mary Welden.

The great question of life is not how God made me, but what sort of a being am I now that I have been made. The problem of existence is not how much can I get out of my threescore years and ten, but how can I fit and educate myself for eternity.—Bishop Remington.

Prayer strengthens the spirit for its conflict with the temptations of the world, helps in keeping the eyes of the soul open to the spiritual adventures that we are in danger of forgetting in the midst of the toil and turmoil of this life, and sharpens the spiritual and moral instincts that often get rusty for want of use.—Indian Messenger.

God is truth. To be true, to hate every form of falsehood, to live a brave, true, real life, that is to love God.—F. W. Robertson.

ATTRACTIVE TOURS.

The Wicker Tours announce a number of attractive tours for the spring and summer of 1928 to Bible Lands and Europe. The Christian Cruise to the Holy Land will be in charge of Dr. W. H. Geistweit, of the First Church, Dayton, Ohio, and his son, Rev. Harold Geistweit, of the First Church, Minneapolis, Minn.

Ample time is given for a real visit to Palestine and Egypt, under the very best auspices.

CHRISTMAS

Nowhere in literature is there another word picture so intrinsically and perfectly beautiful in the simplicity and directness of its telling and the broad splendor and noble grandeur of meaning and theme as the narrative of the Annunciation and birth of the Saviour. No human imagination has conceived nor art achieved a story or thought to compare with it. Far from the opulence and clamor of the cities and from the palaces where power dwelt and pomp glittered, in the sombre darkness of night and over the brooding stillness of the plain where humble men kept patient vigil over helpless dumb creatures, the glory of heaven shone and the multitude of the heavenly host sang. Before the remote and lonely and lowly the skies were peopled suddenly with divinity made visible, proclaiming the invocation on which the soul of mankind is lifted to hope and gladness and the promise that the old yearnings and the sweetest aspirations of mankind shall be fulfilled—"on earth peace and good will".

The Christmas season is the time, above all others, for us to strive fervently to absorb what the heralding from amid the stars of the birth in the manger would teach us. We are prone to let our minds stray afar when we consider peace and universal good will. We look to the palaces and the halls of legislation, the cabinets and statesmen. The Almighty Creator and Lord of all gave the new assurance of His beneficence to the obscure and working people among whom His Son began the work of deliverance from longdarkness and leading to everlasting light. Clear as the glory of the Lord that flashed on the startled eyes of the shepherds is the lesson that it is for each of us to do our own parts toward peace and good will, love and brotherhood among men, beginning with ourselves and in our own families and circles and spheres.

The world is being moved toward obedience to the command and the proclamation of more than nineteen centuries ago. As the power of the few has lessened and the power of the many has grown the endeavor to bind the nations to learn war and lift the sword against each other no more has become more honest and earnest. Yet, progress seems to us pitifully slow as we see, with alternating optimism and disgust, apparent successes and abject failures of League of Nations, international courts of arbitration, disarmament conferences. The fact that they exist is encouraging, but their undertakings are hindered and halting. We of the masses of the people, impotent individually to order events, busied with watching our own flocks of interests and affairs, must do humbly, as we can, to have the glory of the Lord shine and that far-away singing of the angels echo in our own hearts, our own households, wherever our influence may reach.

It is for us to disarm ourselves, to lift up no swords of anger or vengeance or harsh word, to eschew evil and do good, seek peace and ensue it, to persuade ourselves to hurt nobody by word or deed; to beat "our swords into plowshares and our spears into pruning forks" and thereby hurry forward the realization of our prayers: "Thy kingdom come, O God; Thy reign on earth begin." Most of us can look back on Christmas times marred by our own perversities, peevishness, neglects, selfishness, resentments; on others hallowed and made beautiful by love and kindliness and good humor, by self-sacrifices, cordial peace and the perfect charity the exhortation to the Holy Communion urges. We may decide for ourselves what this near Christmas shall be, how it will live in our own memories, how we will be associated with it in the memories of those with whom we will enjoy or spoil it. This is a time not only for recalling the past, luxuriating in what in it was sweet and pleasant, repenting faithfully of what evil there may have been and resolving earnestly for the future, but also for present doing. It is the time to disarm ourselves of our animosities, of all envy, hatreds, malice, uncharitableness, to take into our hearts the spirit and sincere purpose of peace and good will. Be we poor or rich, high or low, old or young, all of us can do it if we will try with all our strength and invoke devoutly the help of the never-failing Helper. If all the Christians of the world would do this, consecrate themselves this Christmas to mutual charity, tolerance and forgiveness, to establishment of peace and good will, the League of Nations and disarmament conferences would accomplish quickly splendid and enduring results. As it is, each of us can make the fact and atmosphere of peace in our varying places.

Those of us who will do it will know a peaceful and happy Christmas, however little or much we may have to give or may be given to us. Even if the season be shadowed by disaster or fear or pain or mournful recollection, the glory of the Lord will shine through and the voices of the hosts of heaven will come to us. When the sky is clear for us and the weather fair, when families may gather free of pressing cares and looming troubles, if we have done full share for peace, to stifle strife, within and around ourselves, every feast will be gladdened, each Christmas light will gleam more brightly, each garland lovelier, every sound of Christmas sweeter, the mirth more genial, the glee of children more delicious. Consciousness that we have done what we could to bring peace and spread good will surely will abide with us as a radiance from above, a living glimpse of the glory that lighted the gloom, a lingering, inspiring, comforting chord of the exultant chant that sounded through the silence of the plain where the shepherds watched.

"All glory be to God on high,
And to the earth be peace;
Good-will henceforth from heaven to men
Begin and never cease."

Alfred B. Williams.

THE ISSUE OF THE SCRIPTURES

By the Reverend Canon G. Osbourne Troop, M. A.

Rector-Emeritus of St. Martin's Church, Montreal.

"Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, today and for ever."

THE grave controversy prevalent in the Mother Church of England at this time brings once more to light the supreme need of an absolute and unchanging authority in the spiritual realm—a tribunal so supported by the human conscience, that from it there remains no appeal. The writer of this article believes with his whole heart and mind that the authority so many are pathetically groping after is found in Jesus Christ and in Him alone. In this field of conflict Christ has two would-be rivals: on the one hand human scholarship, and on the other ecclesiastical tradition. In regard to human scholarship Browning wrote with fine irony—

"There's a new tribunal now Higher than God's—the educated man's."

The appeal to human scholarship logically results in the deification of Reason.

On the other hand, the appeal to ecclesiastical tradition logically issues in Papal Infallibility. There would seem to be no escape from this dilemma, as is clearly revealed in Newman's celebrated "Apologia".

Sadducees and Pharisees.

It is well known that the Sadducees were the "Modernists" of Christ's day upon earth. They were convinced that there was "no Resurrection, neither angel nor spirit". They had no use for the supernatural. Christ definitely rebuked them, in language still singularly significant in this boastful twentieth century. "Ye do err, ye do greatly err," he said, "not knowing the Scriptures, neither the power of God."

The Pharisees had no difficulty in accepting the supernatural; but they went to the opposite extreme. With their lips they honored the Scriptures, but in reality they buried them under ecclesiastical tradition. Thus they brought upon themselves the stern warning of the Lord Jesus:

"Ye have made void the Word of God because of your tradition."

And He went on to apply to them the prophecy of Isaiah: "This people honoureth Me with their lips; but their heart is far from Me. But in vain do they worship Me, teaching as their doctrines the precepts of men."

These words are just as applicable to what is now known as "Catholic Tradition", as they were to the tradition of the Jews. Surely, then, we should lay Christ's solemn words to heart.

It is obvious that both Modernism and Ecclesiasticism, in different ways, assail the supremacy of Christ and of the Scriptures.

Criticism of the Modernists.

It is easy to give examples of this disloyalty. A Modernist, to his honor, frankly confessed that when the principles of the Higher Criticism were applied to the Old Testament, it was thought that they could safeguard the New. But logic compelled them eventually to apply the same criticism to the New Testament, and alas! even to the sacred Personality of Christ Himself.

As to ecclesiastical tradition, it has withdrawn from the laity in the Holy Communion the cup, which the Saviour Himself commanded to be received by all. It has also made "fasting" a condition of approach to the Lord's table, for which there is not a vestige of authority in the Scriptures. It has substituted an "altar" and a sacrificing "priest" for a table and a presbyter, or elder.

Let us now turn seriously and with an open mind to what the historical Christ, rooted in the Scriptures, has to say of His own authority. It is important to bear in mind that the only real Christ is the Christ of the Scriptures. The "modern" Christ is a figment of the imagination; not the Incarnate Son of God, born of the Virgin, risen from the tomb, and enthroned in His glorified Body at the right hand of God. Above all, the curious modern mind objects to the fall of man, and to the all-atoning Blood of Christ.

To the Modernist the glorious words of Toplady are hopelessly out of date:

"Nothing in my hand I bring,
Simply to Thy Cross I cling."

We see, then, that Christ and the Scriptures are both at stake in this fateful controversy: for in all sincerity there is no escape from the issue. We cannot have it both ways.

The Christ of the Scriptures, even before His resurrection, knew and proclaimed that His Father had appointed Him the sole Judge of the living and the dead, and that all that were in the tombs should eventually hear His Voice and come forth. In majestic words He declared: "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life: no man cometh unto the Father but by Me."

Face to face with Pilate and the Cross, He unflinchingly said: "Every one that is of the truth, heareth My voice."

Gethsemane and Calvary.

Nothing can exceed the solemnity of Christ's claim to supreme authority. Beyond all possibility of human invention is His highly-priestly prayer to His Father, as recorded in the seventeenth chapter of St. John. It is uttered in full view of Gethsemane and Calvary. In it He cries: "Father, the hour is come; glorify Thy Son that Thy Son also may glorify Thee; even as Thou gavest Him authority over all flesh."

Just before He ascended into heaven He declared: "All authority hath been given unto Me, both in heaven and on earth."

And in the vision later, granted to St. John on the Isle of Patmos, the glorified Redeemer uses language without a parallel in human literature: "I am the First, and the Last, and the Living One." He says; "and I was dead, and behold, I am alive for evermore; and I have the keys of death, and of the spirit world."

It should be inconceivable that any man professing faith in Christ—I say nothing of honest unbelievers—should dare to criticize Him, or to qualify His references to the Old Testament. Everybody knows that our Lord never gives the slightest hint reflecting upon the integrity of the Scriptures. Nor should we forget that, according to the Scriptures, the Eternal Son by His Father's own appointment is our Creator, as well as our Redeemer and our Judge. If He is our Creator, what scientist can possibly know, as Christ has always known, the mysteries of creation?

The truth is that many learned men in the pride of reason have lost the vision of God. Learning, in right relations with God, is of the greatest value; but it should never be forgotten that "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom".

No man can really see himself as a sinner, lost beyond self-recovery, until he comes face to face with the Heavenly Vision. How memorable are the words of Job:

"I had heard of Thee with the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth Thee: therefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes."

And Isaiah: "Woe is me, for I am undone! For I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of Hosts."

And Saul of Tarsus, at his marvelous conversion, was in a moment brought into the dust before the vision of the glorified Saviour, and from that hour became the willing slave of Jesus Christ, and His ambassador to the world. How full of mingled dignity and humility are his later words: "Wherefore, O King Agrippa, I was not disobedient to the Heavenly Vision!"

The vision of God in Christ may not come to us in the same special form in which it came to Job, or Isaiah, or Saul of Tarsus; but come it must in some form, if we are to know God and Jesus Christ, Whom He hath sent, with the knowledge that is life eternal. This conviction is shared by distinguished men of our own time. President Coolidge said recently: "Unless our halls of learning are real temples, which are to be approached by our youth in an attitude of reverence, consecrated by worship of the truth, they will all end in a delusion. The information that is acquired in them will simply provide a greater capacity for evil. Our institutions of learning must be dedicated to a higher purpose. The life of our nation must rise to a higher realm."

Inspiring Message from Willingdon.

Canada's Governor-General, Viscount Willingdon, speaking a year ago at Queen's University, gave us all an inspiring message:

"A good citizen," he said, "is a man or woman of stainless honor, a person with a determination to play the game straight. He must have ambition to make life happier and brighter for the people around him. Above all, he must have spiritual faith. I am one who believes that no country will survive, unless its people have spiritual vision."

The late Phillips Brooks, of sacred memory, bore similar testimony. "The fullest Christian experience is simply the fullest life. To enter into it, therefore, is in no wise strange. The wonder and the unnaturalness is that any child of God should live outside of it, and so in all his life should never be himself."

We should never allow ourselves to be stampeded by the common slogan, "All scholars are agreed", for there are as great scholars of simple faith as there are of different shades of unbelief. In the spiritual sphere unbelief ultimately leads us nowhere. No one but God in Christ can triumph over sin and death. The eternal God is an unapproachable evolutionist. Before any created thing was brought into being He had the whole history of the universe lying out before Him like an open book. Nothing can ever take Him by surprise. He is prepared for every emergency. Across all the centuries of time He marches in omniscient majesty, with His eye fixed steadfastly on the goal. He pledges Himself that all rule, and all authority and power, shall be put beneath the feet of Jesus Christ, in new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. Then shall we know beyond a doubt that Jesus Christ is indeed the same, yesterday, and today, and for ever.

Just as I close, a trumpet-call has come from Central Africa, in a cable from Mr. Charles T. Studd, famous in days gone by as a leading cricketer at Cambridge University. Mr. Studd has served for more than a quarter of a century as a missionary in Central Africa. His cable was addressed to his wife in England, and is as follows:

"Here we dread neither death, hell, devils nor men. We re-declare our gospel—Jesus only, God, Saviour, King, crucified, risen, glorious: here in spirit, returning bodily soon. All other gospels anathema. Trust God; pray; play the game. Laugh at impossibilities. Sweet and right it is to die for Jesus. This is our testimony to the world."

Let us stand at the salute!

"When I survey the wondrous Cross
On which the Prince of glory died,
My richest gain I count but loss,
And pour contempt on all my pride."

THE SURRENDERED LIFE---IN CHRIST

Conducted by the Reverend Frank Cox

Personal Work—A Result.

OUR Lord Jesus Christ laid down the method that all Christians must follow to be successful in their work for Him. I marvel that so many Christians, including many ministers, can go from week to week without bringing the claims of Jesus Christ to the many unconverted people with whom they come in contact. I recall that for many years in my ministry such an effort was almost entirely unknown to me. I invited people to church, but never a definite appeal to come to Christ. I have not the time or space to tell here how the great change came in my life. Suffice it to say that this method was brought home to me with such telling effect by some very earnest people until I came to realize something of the great need in my own heart and life and asked Him to use me daily in His service through personal work.

It constantly brings the richest blessings into my life, and I want to urge every reader of these words to begin at once what the Brotherhood of St. Andrew has been urging for more than forty years—personal work. A great evangelist in this country, when he was converted, promised God that he would speak to some one every day about their relationship to Jesus Christ. This soon brought a flood of blessing to him and so stirred him that he was soon led out into his great life's work. While attending the Brotherhood Convention in Cleveland some years ago I sought permission to hold an after meeting for any who cared to come. This meeting took place at the conclusion of the evening service.

Quite a number came to the room designated, and we continued there for two hours. Deep feeling was manifested by a number of the fellows and five or six declared their determination to study for the ministry. Nine years later I was in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine and met a fine young clergyman who rushed up to me and asked if I remembered this particular meeting in the hotel that night. He said, "Well, I am in the ministry because of that meeting. I have often wanted to write to you and tell you, but neglected to do so." A few of my friends at that meeting thought I was too severe in the way I dealt with the men. I asked them if they believed they had ever been born again by the Spirit and how they knew it. Their answers were pathetic. Under the probing and pleading through the Spirit they were melted down in a wonderful way and were led to declare their willingness to work for God. I will be glad in heaven that the Spirit directed me to talk to those fellows.

When this young clergyman spoke to me, this thought came to me: Suppose I had gone to the movies after the service, or had indulged in a game of "bridge", what a wonderful blessing I would have missed. Daniel Webster was once asked what was the greatest thought that had ever passed through his mind. "My responsibility to God," was his quick reply. The greatest thought that ever passed through my mind is, "Will I not be held responsible for all those I might have blessed if I had been more yielded to Christ"? Reader, if you have not already begun regular, definite personal work for Christ, begin now. They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever. Dan. 12:3.

THE PURPOSE OF THE JEW

The Wonder of History.

By the Reverend E. L. Langston, M. A.

Incumbent of Emmanuel Church, Wimbledon.

Num. 23:7-10: "And he took up his parable, and said, Balak, the king of Moab, hath brought me from Aram, out of the mountains of the east, saying, Come, curse me, Jacob, and come, defy Israel. How shall I curse, whom God hath not cursed? or how shall I defy, whom God hath not defied? For from the top of the rocks I see Him, and from the hills I behold Him: lo, the people shall dwell alone, and shall not be reckoned among the nations. Who can count the dust of Jacob, and the number of the fourth part of Israel? Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like His!"

THE Jews are the most remarkable people in the world. There is no race like them. They are unique. What a wealth of history is wrapped up in that one word, "Jews"! They are the riddle of philosophers, the marvel of history, and an inexplicable miracle to sceptics and infidels.

There is One Book amongst all books, and it is impossible to account for it apart from the fact that it is the revealed Word of God: there is One Nation amongst all nations, absolutely unique, and it is impossible to account for them apart from the revealed Word of God: there is One Man amongst all the sons of men, the Man Christ Jesus; and it is impossible to account for Him apart from the revealed Word of God. Both the Book, the Nation and the Man are wrapped up the one in the other.

Empires have risen, flourished, faded and fallen, and yet the Jew stands today, the mystery of the ages, living in all times, scattered amongst all nations, an alien in every country, with no central government, and no national rallying point until 1917. Yet he has proved to be the mightiest power in the world. Today he fills the highest places in all departments of life, and succeeds in all that he puts his hand to, whether it be Prime Minister, banker, editor, lawyer, soldier, actor, philosopher, bishop or theologian. The Jew is always in the front rank of history. At the same time he is a strange phenomenon: though he may occupy exalted places in government, yet there is no one that is more hated, persecuted, despised than the Jew.

To the man of the world, and to the ill-instructed Christian, there is a strange uncanny indestructibility about this nation. They have suffered, during their long history, decimating persecution, and yet they still exist in stronger numbers than ever: for more than half of their history they have lived apart from their land, without national cohesion or organization—kings, governments, nations have done all they could to wipe them off the face of the earth; Pharaoh tried to drown them, but they could not be drowned; Nebuchadnezzar tried to burn them, but they could not be burned; Haman tried to hang them, but they could not be hanged. The great French sceptic Renan says, "The philosophy of history fails utterly to account for the Jew."

How can we account for their remarkable past and their persistent virility? What is the purpose of their survival? There is only one Book that can really solve the problem of the Jew, and that is the Bible. The Jews alone, above all nations, have had their history written in advance: there is scarcely any feature of any consequence that they have experienced during the past 4,000 years which has not been predicted with an exactness and precision which admits of no correction. Why is the Jew so unique? What does the Bible say concerning them and their origin:

An Unconditional Covenant.

Gen. 12:2-3: "And the Lord said unto Abram, I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great, and thou shalt be a blessing.

"And I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed."

The above words are remarkable in view of the fact that we see the God of the whole earth, entering into a contract with a single man amongst men, and the contract does not depend upon any conditions whatever. In this covenant there are seven clauses:

(1) "The Lord said unto Abram, I will make of thee a great nation." This promise to Abraham has been fulfilled.

(2) "I will bless thee." It is a matter of history, and we know that God did bless Abraham."

(3) "And make thy name great." There is no name upon earth that is more widely honored and revered than the name "Abraham", not even the name "Jesus", for we must remember that "Abraham" is honored by some fourteen million Jews, by the whole of Christendom, and by the whole of Islam as "the Father of the Faithful".

(4) "Thou shalt be a blessing." History reveals to us how Abraham has been, and still is, a blessing to all men.

(5) "I will bless them that bless thee." Every nation and individual that has sought to be a blessing to Abraham or his seed has received direct from the hand of God a blessing in return; no one can pray for Missions to Jews or seek to do a Jew a good turn without getting some return from the covenant-keeping God of Abraham.

(6) "And curse him that curseth thee." History and experience reveal the fact that the nations and individuals that have raised their hand against Abraham and his seed have been cursed of God. We look back upon the great empires of Egypt, Assyria, Babylonia, Greece, Rome, and in the Middle Ages we see that great empire of Spain, smashed to pieces as a result of the Inquisition, which was first started against the Jews; and then to turn to modern days we look at the ruins of Russia, and see a great, vast empire humbled to the dust. We remember that the God of Abraham hath said, "I will curse him that curseth thee". Our minds go back to the awful pogroms of a few years ago and the consistent ill-treatment of the Jews by the Russians for the past centuries.

(7) "And in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed." It is to this clause that I want to draw your special attention, for it is reiterated to the patriarchs, and later to David, and the whole of Israel generally: for God distinctly promises that His seed is to be a world blessing.

Wrapped up with the covenant in Gen. 12 is also another covenant in Gen. 15:18, "In the same day the Lord made a covenant with Abram, saying, Unto thy seed have I given the land from the river of Egypt to the great river, the river Euphrates". That is to say, the future centre of world peace, prosperity and happiness is to be between the river of Egypt and the river Euphrates.

So far this is unfulfilled prophecy. We must not forget that when the promise of world blessing was given to Abraham and his seed, Abraham and his wife were quite old, being nearly a hundred years of age. St. Paul, commenting on Abraham's attitude to the promise, says (Weymouth), "Under utterly hopeless conditions he hopefully believed so that he might become the forefather of many nations, . . . nor did he in unbelief stagger at God's promise and became mighty in faith, giving glory to God, and being absolutely certain that whatever promise He is bound by, He is able also to make good. Rom. 4:18-21.

Thus we see every Jew is the product of a divine miracle; the result of the faith of Abraham: their whole history from the very commencement has been, and will continue to be, miraculous.

The Jews Are Being Prepared for a World Mission.

All through the Scriptures and throughout their dispersion the Jews are conscious of this fact. Isa. 27:6, "In that day shall Jacob take root, Israel shall blossom and bud, and they shall fill the face of the world with fruit".

When Are They to Fulfil Their Mission? Are Those Days Near?

Isa. 19:23-25 (R. V.), gives us a very remarkable prophecy that has been partially fulfilled in our lifetime. "In that day shall there be a highway out of Egypt to Assyria, and the Assyrian shall come into Egypt and the Egyptian into Assyria, and the Egyptian shall worship with the Assyrian. In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and Assyria a blessing in the midst of the earth, for the Lord of Hosts hath blessed them, saying, "Blessed be Egypt my people and Assyria the work of my hands, and Israel mine inheritance".

Never till 1917-1918 had this prophecy received a fulfilment. In the recent war, why was it the British failed at Gallipoli? Because God wanted a highway to be made between Egypt and Assyria. In the north the Germans and the Turks had a hand in making it, and the British helped to build it in the south. "The Assyrian shall come into Egypt and the Egyptian into Assyria." That is to say, there shall be a coming and going between Egypt and Assyria, and over the whole area there is to be one religion: in the past there has been no such thing, but God has destined that this shall be the religious centre of the world.

"In that day shall Israel be a third with Egypt and Assyria a blessing in the midst of the earth."

Remarkable Preparations in the Near East.

No man can look unmoved and unstirred, in the light of these predictions at what has happened and is still happening in Palestine and the Near East with regard to the Jews.

Not only is the Promised Land being prepared for the Jews, but the Jews are being prepared for the land. It is almost an axiom in the unfolding of prophecy, that blessing to the land means blessing to the people, and blessing to the people means blessing to the land, for the two are wrapped up the one in the other.

What Is the Significance of All This for the Christian?

St. Matt. 24:32 (R. V.) and following we read, "Now from the fig tree learn a parable, when her branch is tender and putteth forth leaves", that is, when life appears to the tree, "ye know that summer is nigh"; in other words, when you see signs of reviving in the Jewish race—for that is what the fig tree represents—"Likewise ye also, when ye see these things coming to pass, know that He is nigh, even at the doors".

These are all sure signs and indications that Church history is about to be closed. The function for which the Church was created is nearly completed. It was created to be a witness to the Cross of Calvary in the power of the Holy Spirit to all nations and peoples, and to gather from their number an elect people unto God. The word for Church is "ecclesia" or "called out ones". The number of those "called out ones" is almost complete.

Some of us are profoundly convinced of the fact that we are in the very closing days of this age, and that what our God predicted is about to come to pass—St. Matt. 24:42, "Watch, or ye know not on what day your Lord cometh"; vs. 44, "Be ye also ready, for in an hour that ye think not, the Son of Man cometh".

What Is the Purpose of His Coming?

He is coming for a twofold purpose:

(1) To gather together the true Church of God. "The dead in Christ shall rise first, then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up with them to meet the Lord in the air." 1 Thess. 4:15-18.

(2) To resume relationship with His own chosen people, the seed of Abraham, and make them a blessing to all nations and that the land shall be "a blessing in the midst of the earth".

Our God warns us that when we see signs of reviving coming to Eastern lands and to the Jewish race, that those very signs of life are sure indications that "He is nigh, even at the doors".

Therefore, it is possible that in the very near future a tremendous thing is likely to happen: the heavens will be rent, for the Lord Jesus is about to leave His Heavenly Throne and come with His angels to take His Church to Himself.

In the light of this great possibility, how are you living? Have you the inward consciousness that you will be amongst those "caught up" to meet the Lord in the air?

Some one may say, "How can I know that I shall be amongst that number"? It is a very easy matter, for the Lord has told us how we can know.

It is not the fact that you have been baptized, confirmed and are a regular attendant at the Lord's house, and partake regularly of the Lord's Supper, that will fit you for that day. St. John 3:3 says, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God". Everything depends upon the new birth. How can we be born again? This is a simple, straightforward transaction. The sinner needs to come to the Cross of Calvary, and in deep self-abasement pray a prayer something like this. "Lord Jesus, I deserve that death, but I come to Thee to pardon all my sins. Cleanse me from all my iniquities in Thy precious blood; and make me Thy servant :I here and now hand over to Thee my life, for time and eternity." The soul that prays that prayer sincerely from the heart, at once, is pardoned, and forgiven, and is made meet for the kingdom of God, and is become a member of the family of God. God's promise to that soul is, "Him that cometh unto Me, I will in no wise cast out".

May God give us grace, one and all, to be ready, watching, waiting, working, looking, for His coming again.

Surely, one way of working for the coming of the Lord Jesus, the Messiah, is by whole-heartedly supporting every effort for the promoting of Christianity amongst the "brethren of our Lord, according to the flesh"!

PLAIN BIBLE STUDIES

Prepared by J. T. Bougher.

Note: In this new series of studies effort will be made to set forth in brief form wondrous things that God would have us know as told in His own eternal words.

Lesson No. 13.
Topic—Hell, and the Lake of Fire; the Everlasting Habitation of the Lost.

It is a sad fact that of the continuous passing of souls into eternity, the vastly greater number are forever lost! For in Matt. 7 we read that "wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: and straight is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it".

We live in a time when, true to Scriptural forecast, we hear very little warning of the awful place of the lost, toward which an indifferent world is drifting. "No Hell" is one of Satan's master-pieces, and the teaching of man-made "isms" of present-day popularity. But what saith the Lord in His immutable Word, and what are the elements of horror there?

1. A real place—Luke 16:28.
2. Its location; the Scripture points down—Ps. 63:9—Eph. 4:9.
3. There is suffering there—Luke 16:23.
4. Weeping and gnashing of teeth—Matt. 25:30.
5. Everlasting fire—Matt. 25:41.
6. Fire that shall never be quenched—Mark 9:43-48.
7. Everlasting punishment—Matt. 25:46.
8. There is memory there; Tell my five brothers lest they also come to this place of torment—Luke 16:28.
9. Beyond return: and no hope—Luke 16:26.
10. No rest day or night—Rev. 14:11.
11. Who are the inhabitants there? "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God—Ps. 9:17. The fearful and unbelieving, and the abominable, murderers, whoremongers, sorcerers, idolators, and all liars. "All have sinned"—Rev. 21:8; Rom. 2:23.
12. And whosoever was not found written in the Book of Life was cast into the lake of fire—Rev. 20:15.
13. The lake which burneth with fire and brimstone—Rev. 21:8.
14. Awake * * * to shame and everlasting contempt. Dan. 12:2.

Could there be a more solemn warning? Both the warning, and the way of escape, are the written words of a righteous God—"For God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life"—John 3:16.

"How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?"—Heb. 2:3.

"O, earth, earth, earth, hear the Word of the Lord"!—Jer. 22:29.

GEOLOGY AND EVOLUTION

By Nelson P. Dame

Part III.

IN the San Bernardino Mountains in Southern California, thousands of feet above the sea level, are thick beds of rock, packed full of sea shells. They are not very different from shells to be found in various parts of the Atlantic or the Pacific Ocean. How did they get there? We all know that these conditions are not peculiar to Southern California. Almost every country on the globe can furnish similar proofs that the dry land and the ocean have not always been as they are now. Sometimes it is this bed of shells a mile or two high on the mountain-side. Sometimes it is a whole forest of trees buried half a mile or more down in the ground, with a thick bed of coral or crinoidal limestone spread out over it. Sometimes it is the remains of luxuriant semi-tropical life that once prevailed away up in what are now the Arctic regions, or over the very Pole itself.

Near Palermo, Sicily, extraordinary quantities of the bones of gigantic hypopotimi, in complete hecatombs, have been found. Tons of these bones have been sent to Marseilles to furnish animal charcoal for use in refining sugar. Sir Joseph Prestwich says of them: "The extremely fresh condition of these bones, and the fact that animals of all ages were involved in the catastrophe that destroyed them, show that the event was geologically comparatively recent, as other facts show it to have been sudden."

In Alabama the large vertebrae of a gigantic species of whale were formerly found in such abundance over the country that they were used for making walls and fences, or were burned to rid the fields of them. These bones indicate that vast numbers of these great beasts were thrown many miles away from the Gulf by some mighty tide or rush of water, which left them dry and floundering under the hot Southern sun.

The same disaster befell reptiles and amphibians, to say nothing more of the larger mammals, which are also found in countless myriads, packed together as if in natural graveyards; all destroyed violently and suddenly.

The coal measures themselves all tell of some sudden and violent destruction of a most profuse tropical or semi-tropical vegetation, which was covered by mud. This was followed by another layer of vegetation, and that by another layer of mud, until there are in some places eighty-odd layers of coal with layers of shale between them.

Every geologist who has examined these remains of fish and animal and vegetable life as they occur in the sedimentary rocks has been compelled to admit, despite the doctrine of uniformity, that some sudden and violent disaster overtook them. There may have been a separate disaster for each of these masses of living things, or there may have been one world-wide deluge that buried these fossil forms and made these vast deposits of rock. If the latter be the explanation, the flood must have been a vastly more extensive affair than is generally supposed. The testimony of the rocks seem to confirm the world-wide tradition of mankind that such a mighty deluge did occur, and that "the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished".

How could such a deluge have possibly occurred? How it did occur we do not know, though the fact that it did occur is now as well established as the destruction of Carthage or the burning of Moscow. But scientific men have told us how it might have occurred.

THE earth's axis, as is well known, is not perpendicular to the plane of its orbit. It is inclined twenty-three and one-half degrees from the perpendicular. The astronomical cause of this position is not known. But the astronomical habit of the earth being once established, it is difficult to conceive a cause that could change it. But we may suppose such a change to be possible, if the earth were struck by a comet, or some other astronomical body that had gotten temporarily out of its course. The asteroids or planetoids are believed by some to have once been a planet that was broken up into fragments, either by an internal explosion or by some external collision. Let us suppose the axis of the earth to have once been perpendicular to the plane of its orbit; and then suppose it had been struck by this planet, and the axis shifted suddenly from the perpendicular to its present inclination of twenty-three and one-half degrees. That change would have let loose forces sufficient to do an inconceivable amount of geological work: far more than our problem requires. Calculations have been made on the supposition of a far less disturbance than the maximum indicated above, and it has been shown that the earth, like a huge top, would "begin to wobble, and it would continue to wobble, as a top does when going to sleep" (Houghton), until it had adjusted itself to its new position of rotation.

In the meantime the oceans would have flown from their beds at an attempted speed of a thousand miles an hour, and twice each day they would have rolled a mighty tidal wave around the globe, which Twisden has calculated would have been about six miles in height at the equator. Tidal waves are true transition waves, and involve a movement of the whole mass of the water bodily to the very bottom of the oceans. Such a deluge, moving at such a speed, would dig out the mountains by their roots and shatter the surface of the earth beyond all conception. It would have required only a fraction of this energy to transport those erratics from the mountains of Scandinavia across the Baltic Sea to the places where they are now found in Northern Germany and Poland. This flood, rushing back and forth, at this incredible speed, would have torn masses from the forests as they went forward and strewn the debris over a wide extent of country, and then covered it with mud as they returned, repeating this operation with less and less speed until the earth had steadied down and the waters had adjusted themselves to their new direction. This mighty deluge could have laid down all the sedimentary deposits that exist on the earth at present and "destroyed every living thing of all flesh" and buried them in the mud, as we find them today.

THE geological records cast some most interesting light upon some of the conditions of the "world that was" before the deluge.

All the fossils (save a very few of the "glacial age", so-called, and they admit of another easy explanation) give us proofs that an almost eternal spring prevailed in the arctic regions, and semi-tropical conditions in north temperate latitudes: give us proofs in short of a singular uniformity of climate over the whole globe, which we can hardly conceive possible, must less account for. Howorth and Dana tell us that the best thermometer which we can use to test the character of a climate is the flora and fauna (the vegetation and the animal life' that existed while it prevailed. This evidence is unmistakable: cold-blooded reptiles cannot live in icy water, semi-tropical plants cannot ripen their seeds and sow themselves under arctic conditions. An examination of all the ages past, down to the deluge, shows no discontinuous and alternating climate, no evidence whatever of the existence of periods of intense cold intervening between warm periods, but just the contrary. There was no frigid zone, and there was no excessively torrid zone. In past ages not only was the climate more uniform, but more evenly distributed over the whole earth. The animal and vegetable relics found in the polar regions uniformly testify that a warm climate has in former times prevailed over the whole globe.

This genial climate which marked the "world that was", with no alternations of summer and winter, of heat and cold, was most conducive to growth for animal and vegetable life alike. And we consequently find the seas and lands swarming with life in incredible numbers. Not only so, but they also attained gigantic size in comparison with their descendants which are with us now. And they were longer lived than our present animals of the same species. The elephant, the rhinoceros, the hippopotamus, the lion, the tiger were all enormous as compared with their descendants: for that our animals are lineal descendants of those of that older world which ended at the deluge is beyond question, though some geologists and biologists do not like to admit it. The coal beds show us vegetation enormously larger than anything which we possess of the same kind. The giant trees of California are more likely descendants of some ante-deluvian forest. The modern club mosses, which are insignificant plants never reaching more than two feet in height, and generally trailing on the ground, were represented in that older world by great trees. Our horse-tails, ground pines, ferns and cycads are little more than herbs or shrubbery; but the ancient representatives of these plants before the deluge were trees from thirty to ninety feet in height. And their carbonized stems and leaves make up our best coal beds.

The rocks show us frogs from six to ten feet in height, some with "jaws more powerful than an ox". Locusts had an expansion of wing of over seven inches. Dragon flies had bodies from a foot to sixteen inches long, with wings over two feet in spread. Dana says that our lion, bear and hyena are "dwarfs in comparison" with those before the deluge. He also says: "A species thrives best in the fittest climate. Then the fittest climate was universal." The largest thing we have on earth today of the lizard shape is the crocodile or the alligator, which run from ten to fifteen feet in length. In the Museum of Natural History we have a skeleton of a great beast of that general type, the dinosaur, that is said to be ninety feet in length, of such "height of body and massiveness of limb that, without the evidence from the bones, would have been thought too great for muscle to move".

What wonder is it that we read in the Hebrew records that men were "giants in those days". All things else, animal and vegetable, were "giants in those days". Does it seem strange that the Hebrew records tell us that men in those days before the flood lived far longer lives than men do now, seven, eight, and rarely nine hundred years and over? Everything else lived longer then than things of the same kind do now. Why not man also?

THEN the deluge came, which put an end to that wonderful climate, and we hear for the first time in the Hebrew records of "summer and winter", with their alternations of heat and cold. An old hymn used to speak of the earth as we now have it as a "desert drear". That is just what the geological records show it to be in comparison with the "world that was". Everything that we have now is a dwarf, a degenerate, by the side of the same kind of thing that existed then.

Everything? Perhaps I ought to have excepted the horse. According to the theory of evolution, of course, things ought to grow larger and better as time passes. Some evolutionists even quote Scripture to prove that their theory is all right: "First the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear." So, of course, the horse must not only grow from a small colt to a full-sized horse, as all horses do, but in order to support the theory of evolution, the horse must have been developed from a very much smaller animal of the fossil world.

In the Natural History Museum in New York they have arranged a series of skeletons, starting with the skeleton of a little animal about the size of a fox, that had toes, and coming on up gradually to the skeleton of a real horse, with its hoofs. And they solemnly present this graded series of skeletons to prove the evolution of the horse. I have seen it referred to many times as evidence of the truth of the theory of evolution. Was there ever anything quite so absurd?

In the first place, there is not the slightest evidence that the various animals that are represented in that series of skeletons were even remotely akin to the horse. We might collect from here and there a series of skeletons of birds graded all the way up from the smallest humming bird to the largest Thanksgiving turkey. That would prove that there had been various sizes of creatures that looked as much like turkeys as the fox-size skeleton in the museum looks like the skeleton of a horse. But that would not prove that the various birds represented by those skeletons were of the same species as the turkey, or that they were the ancestors of the larger bird: as we know that they were not. If all those skeletons in the museum were skeletons of real horses, that would only prove that there were horses of various sizes. It would not prove that the larger horse was developed from the smaller, any more than it would prove that the smaller horse was a degenerate from the larger. As Bateson says, "Variations of many kinds, often considerable, we daily witness, but no origin of species", and as he shows elsewhere, no real transgression of the limits of the species. Until we have some evidence that looks in that direction, that series of skeletons in the Museum of Natural History will remain a grim joke, to say nothing of the honesty or the intelligence of the people who arranged it, or of those who refer to it as "demonstrating the truth of the theory of evolution":

AGAIN, as Herbert Spencer and Huxley and a host of lesser scientists have shown, to quote Huxley again: "One verdict—'not proven and not provable'—must be recorded against all the grand hypotheses of the paleontologist respecting the general succession of life on the globe." There is, as we have seen, not the slightest evidence that any one of the sedimentary strata is generally and necessarily older or younger than another. In one locality they are found arranged in one way; in another they are arranged differently. The only thing that can be said confidently is that they are never arranged anywhere according to the chart in our school text-books. Then again, it cannot be said that any one fossil is older or younger than any other fossil. All the fossils were made practically at the same time by the same great cosmic catastrophe, the deluge, as we have seen. There was no long interval between the laying down of the different sedimentary deposits. The animals, whose fossil remains we have, all lived, as they all died, practically at the same time. Therefore, if all the skeletons in our series in the museum were those of horses, which of course they were not, it would not even help to suggest the idea of evolution, much less prove it.

ONCE more we have seen that many plants and almost all the animals that we had before the deluge were larger, often enormously larger, than the same species which we have in our present world. That very striking fact is fully accounted for by the evidence that, as Dana says, "A species thrives best in the fittest climate". In the world before the deluge "the fittest cilmate was universal". Growth was not checked by any alternation of heat and cold. Abundant food and the fittest climate explain the greater size and the longer life of all the antedeluvian species of animal and vegetable life.

This fact is interesting, too. The drop from the large size and longer life of the ante-deluvian animals to the dwarfs of our world was as sudden as the deluge. It occurred at the time of the deluge. To quote Dana again: "Geologists have attributed the extinction of some species and the dwindling of others to the cold"; the cold that came with the deluge, and that "froze suddenly, and as in a single winter's night", the countless herds of mammoths in Northern Siberia. The degeneration that took place was not gradual, like an evolution working backwards, but very sudden.

If we were going to prepare a list of skeletons showing the "development" of any other kind of animal except the horse, say of the lion, bear, hyena, elephant or any of the invertebrates, insects, fishes, amphibians, reptiles, mammals or plants, we would have to begin with a fossil ancestor of giant size, and then step down suddenly to the modern dwarf representative of that species: all except the horse. The series of skeletons in the museum "prove", "demonstrate" that the horse never grew bigger than a fox when the food and climate were most favorable for growth, and then grew big and strong when the conditions of growth were most unfavorable. But he is the only animal in the whole menagerie that proves an exception to the rule. Now if it had only been the crab, "the little red fish that swims backwards", we could understand it. It might be natural for it to develop backwards. But the horse!

O, Mendalism has cut the tap-root of the doctrine of evolution, which for a century has been declaring that man had a simian ancestry. Even Dr. Henry Fairchild Osborn, who is responsible for that hoax perpetrated on the public by that series of skeletons in the Museum of Natural History in New York, "proving", "demonstrating" the doctrine of evolution, has begun to see the light. Listen to this protest from him:

"The ape-human ancestry theory is greatly weakened by recent evidence. . . . I regard the ape-human theory as totally false and misleading. It should be banished from our speculations and from our literature, not on sentimental grounds, but on purely scientific grounds, and we should now resolutely set our faces toward the discovery of our actual pro-human ancestors. . . . The 'Dawn Man' belonged to a distinct family, the Hominidae, ground-living, alert, capable of tool-making. The ape belongs to a distinct family, the Simidae, tree-living, sluggish, incapable of tool-making."

An Advent Bible Study

By the Rev. Henry Ward, Rector of Bispham Parish, Blackpool, England.

Aim or Lesson—The meaning of Christmas, St. Luke 2:1-14, St. John 3:16.

1. God the Father So Loved That He Gave—(a) The Need for It—God saw man could never save himself. Test after test proved this. To fulfill the promise, Gen. 3:15. Prophets pointed to it, people looked for it. (b) The Gift—His Only Son—Why? No other good enough. Law broken; justice to be met; Jesus came and fulfilled it; suffered for us.

2. God the Son So Loved That He Came—(a) In Humility His earthly parents peasants of royal line. A King born in a Stable in the Royal City. God—With our body nature, sin only excepted. This royal family only recognized by the shepherds and Magi. (b) To Lay Down His Life for His Enemies, John 15:13, Rom. 6:8. (c) To Defeat Satan in the very form Satan had conquered man.

Book Reviews

"IN CONFERENCE WITH THE BEST MINDS": By Lorne Pierce. Published by Cokesbury Press, Nashville, Tenn.

There are thirty-one chapters of wit and wisdom on the art of preaching and reading by one of Canada's ablest preachers and editors in this very attractive volume.

The chapters are very brief and there is not a dull one in the book. Every phase of the Christian ministry is touched upon with sound, common sense. As editor of the United Church of Canada Publishing House the gifted author comes into touch with the best literature of the world. At the end of each chapter recent books bearing on the subject are listed. The volume is one that will give pleasure and inspiration to clergymen of any age or experience.

The titles to the chapters indicate the scope of the author's purpose. The references and quotations are a treasury of wisdom and humor: "Progressive Preaching," "Ambassadors of God," "The Aristocracy of Brains," "Old Wine in New Bottles," "Pulpit Vulgarity," "The Decay of Yelling," "Can the Ministry Save Itself?" "Twenty Thousand Sermons—Mostly Duds," "Jesus as a Preacher." Picked at random, the little chapter on "The Decay of Yelling" will afford us a sample of the author's humor and good sense.

"The tendency today is not to minimize candor or to soften the tone of authority, but to discount spurious sensationalism. The true fountain of eloquence must always be the highest truth, the rarest beauty and the divinest good, exalted and empowered by fervent feeling. But, too often, fervency is associated with noise, loud and continuous. Sermons, to change the life, must reach into the mind, satisfy its questionings, direct its gropings and stimulate its faculties. . . . Experience and all the zeal and fervency of the world, without hard, sweaty, mental grinding, end in sound and fury and froth. When the ears are being stunned, the mind is not being reached. When the preacher's voice reaches within an octave of a scream, his powers of collected reasoning are in temporary abeyance. Not infrequently both preacher and people confuse eloquency with yell-o-quence."

"And with a return to sanity in preaching, there is noticed a similar movement toward sanity in church publicity. The raucous sermon is as out of date as the raucous billboard. Power is always associated with dignity and beauty. Bishop McConnell, in his book, 'Public Opinion and Theology', has an interesting chapter on 'Publicity in the Kingdom of God'. What he says here is quite along the same line with Dr. Stidger's 'Standing Room Only". These men, who know what the drawing power of eloquence means, bitterly arraign the cheap, tawdry claptrap of so many of our churches in their straining after packed houses, after what these writers call crowds, but not congregations. Lengthy quotation would be illuminating if space permitted, especially the sections on church finances, the raffling off of religion at a spurious species of revival service, and the vaudeville billboard, with the wild, weird sermon themes that bellow at you. Jesus was timely, forceful, practical, even revolutionary, but never once did He sacrifice the urgency of directing the minds of men and the dignity of truth to gesticulating garrulity. It is difficult to refrain from falling into a like error of excess when speaking of the jazz symbolism of the modern church billboard."

"Wesley was right. Sensational preaching is the swinging of the pendulum away from sound preaching; and roaring evangelism has no basis in reason or common sense. We frequently come across homiletic sleight of hand and dexterous, if not dare-devil, exegesis, which always fail to establish us in truth or in confidence with the preacher. Preaching and publicity, which lack the elements of sober sense and refining dignity, have not the right to be called worship. The so-called getting down to the people, for which there is a craze today, is only getting down into a man's ministerial grave. A very great percentage of the homiletic helps in demand by preachers, as well as books on practical psychology, are only thinly disguised aids to draw the crowds, 'cribs' to assist a preacher to know 'human nature' better and what it will fall for and gormandize upon. It is as intelligent to appeal to this morbid appetite as to make executions public, because so many seem to fatten on such things. It comes as no surprise, therefore, where the ministry is estimated in such terms, that churches break out all over the country with a kind of megalomania mumps, a craze for increases, booms, drives, membership hunts, numerical advances 'over last year's report', until we have developed a kind of actuarial Christianity."

"How different all this is from the method of Him who came saying, 'Learn of me', whose dearest title was simply 'Teacher'."

"But these have their reward."

"MAN, GOD AND IMMORTALITY." "Thoughts on Human Progress": By Sir James George Frazer. Published by The Macmillan Co., New York.

This very interesting volume is a compilation from the author's larger works, revised and edited by himself. It is intended to meet the demand for a more popular presentation of the studies made and conclusions reached in his scientific works, "The Golden Bough", "Totemism and Exogamy" and a number of others. "All I have attempted in this volume," he says, "is to crystallize, as it were, the results of my studies into an optic glass which may afford the general reader some momentary glimpses of the long march of humanity on the upward road from savagery to civilization."

The book is simply and admirably arranged for the general reader. There is the study of man, animal and intellectual, his development in his social contacts and his growth in the conception of God and belief in the supernatural. Lastly, the belief of man in a future world and his own immortality, which has been found to be universal, is very ably and reasonably stated. The style of the author is so simple and the language so clear that the varied and abundant materials are made available to any intelligent reader.

The volume is a handsome octavo priced at three dollars.

"A Day of Intercession and Discussion in Rio de Janeiro."

Mr. Editor:

Shortly after my arrival in Brazil I was privileged to be present at a meeting of a unique and interesting character at the Church of the Redeemer in Rio de Janeiro. Bishop Thomas requested the clergy of Central Brazil, the officers and teachers of the Sunday schools of Rio de Janeiro, and the officers of the various church societies in the city to meet with him for prayer and for a discussion of the problems confronting the Brazilian Episcopal Church in that section of the country.

In response to his request, there were present of the clergy the Rev. C. H. Sergel, of the Church of the Redeemer, Rio; the Rev. Euclydes Deslandes, of St. Paul's Church, Rio; the Rev. Clodoaldo Ramos, of Trinity Church, Rio. From Sao Paulo, twelve hours' distant by train, came the Rev. Solomao Ferraz and the Rev. Iassoje Ito, who, with much success, is working among the Japanese colonists in the State of Sao Paulo.

The sessions of the day were begun at 10 A. M. with a meeting of the Bishop and the clergy. After prayer and hymns there followed a frank discussion of certain problems, which the ministers present had encountered in their work.

The Rev. Charles Sergel complained of the absence of the evangelistic spirit among laymen. The Rev. Solomao Ferraz spoke of encountering an apathetic indifference to spiritual matters in the men and women of the Church. The Rev. Euclydes Deslandes mentioned the need of a more perfect understanding between the pastor and his people and complained of a lack of opportunity for adequate parochial visiting. The Rev. Clodoaldo Ramos said that he found a serious difficulty in the fact that there were so few properly trained church members. The Rev. Iassoje Ito pointed out certain of his problems, which were due to the fact that his work lay among non-Christians, many of whom have no religious beliefs of any sort.

At 11:30 Bishop Thomas, assisted by the Rev. C. H. Sergel, held a corporate communion for the clergy, their wives, and for a few of the regular Church workers. Afterwards a very delicious lunch was served to those present by the ladies of the Church of the Redeemer.

After lunch the Bishop and clergy went to the cemetery of St. Francis Xavier to visit the tomb of the Rev. Dr. Meem. A prayer was offered by the Rev. Solomao Ferraz and then flowers were placed on the tomb as a loving tribute to the memory of this pioneer missionary, whose consecrated life and ministry were such a great factor in the establishment of the Brazilian Episcopal Church.

Returning to the Church of the Redeemer, of which Dr. Meem had been rector for ten years or more, and which had been founded by Bishop Brown, the Bishop and clergy took up again the problems they had discussed at the morning session. An effort was made to discover the causes of the difficulties under consideration and various remedies for them were suggested.

At 3 P. M. this meeting was brought to a close and a song service was held in the church. At this service nine Sunday schools were represented by their officers and teachers. It was also attended by the officers of all the church organizations and by representatives from the parishes in Rio de Janeiro and vicinity.

After the song service there was an intermission for tea, following which every one present met together in the church. Problems relating to the work of the Woman's Auxiliary were first taken up for discussion and some time was given to a consideration of them. Then problems peculiar to the men's societies were briefly considered. The last hour of this meeting was devoted to a discussion of difficulties encountered by the Sunday schools, and, though the time was limited, an effort was made to solve some of them.

The afternoon session was brought to a close at 6 P. M. and dinner was served on the church grounds to the large gathering. Afterwards the vestries from the Churches of the Redeemer, St. Paul's and Trinity met together for a discussion of their common problems.

This very interesting day was closed by a joint service in the Church of the Redeemer of the congregations in Rio de Janeiro and its neighborhood. The Bishop and all of the clergy took part in this service. A very appropriate sermon for this occasion was preached by the Rev. Solomao Ferraz.

Those who attended the various meetings felt that the day was a most successful one from every point of view and went away feeling that they had been enriched spiritually and stimulated to greater efforts in their labors for the Episcopal Church in Brazil. Another inestimable benefit derived from these meetings lay in the fact that they promoted a greater feeling of fellowship and a fuller union between the congregations in Central Brazil.

The success of the day was due in no small measure to Bishop Thomas, who presided over all of the meetings. Under his skillful direction they were run according to schedule; the discussions were conducted smoothly, and matters of little import were not allowed to consume any of the precious time.

The day's events made a profound impression on me, as I had just arrived in the field and it was my first real contact with the Brazilian Episcopal Church. I was struck with the enthusiastic interest displayed by the clergy and laymen in all of the meetings. Practically every one present took part in the discussions and had something of profit to offer. Regardless of an imperfect understanding of all that transpired, I could sense the enthusiasm displayed in the various meetings and could detect an eager effort on the part of all to reach the heart of the difficulties impeding the progress of the Church. It was easy to see the love of these, our Brazilian friends, for the Episcopal Church and that its welfare lies close to their hearts.

DESPERATE NEED.

Mr. Editor:

The Missionary District of Liberia, West Africa, desperately needs a layman as treasurer. We would like a communicant of this Church who is a competent bookkeeper. He should be free from family obligations and of sufficient maturity to be a guarantee of his having had wide experience, and of being in every way stable in character and devotion.

It is a difficult task in a trying climate, and only one with a robust constitution could be happy in the position. The work is to care for the disbursing of salary and other items of a budget totaling in the neighborhood of $100,000.

The worker would live in Monrovia at the Bishop's house and labor in close association with the Bishop. The salary is small, but sufficient for living expenses.

Place and Function of Province.

At the Synod of the Province of Sewanee, which met in Columbus, Georgia, October 25, 26, 27, resolutions were adopted expressing the interpretation of that Province of the place and function of the Province in the Church's organization.

The resolutions read as follows:

Resolved, That Section 1 of the report of the Commission on Increased Efficiency of the Provincial Organization in the Province of Sewanee be accepted as an adequate interpretation of the present relation of the Province and its function in the Church's work, as follows:

1. We recommend that the Province be considered as a working unit in the Church's organization. The function of the Province should be considered as administrative rather than as legislative. Let the Province be considered an association for the purpose of cooperation in all the Church's work.

The natural relationship of the Province will then be with the National Council. This has proven true in practice. The General Convention is organized without regard to the Provinces, but is composed of Diocesan delegations whose provincial affiliation is disregarded therein. The General Convention has no present intention of giving to the Province any share in responsible deliberation upon the matters with which it deals. The General Convention has contented itself with passing rules guiding and regulating the Provinces. Aside from that, it has let the Provinces severely alone; the one exception is the commitment of the development of Rural Work in America to the Provinces, and this rather as a suggestion than as a definite mandate.

On the other hand, the association of the National Council with the Provinces is much closer. The Provinces, as such, are represented in the National Council, and in some degree at least the National Council has made use of the Provincial system; notably, the Department of Religious Education. In ways which will be pointed out later in this report, the opportunities for cooperation between the National Council and the Province are numerous and important.

Resolved, That Section 2 of the report of the Commission on Increased Efficiency of the Provincial Organization in the Province of Sewanee, as amended, be approved, as follows:

2. The Synod then should be considered as a workers' conference.

The members of the Synod should be, as far as possible, leaders in the several activities of the dioceses. The matters considered by the Synod should be, primarily, plans whereby diocesan leaders may cooperate in the several activities of the Church, under the guidance of Provincial leaders and in close contact with the National leaders.

In suggesting that the Synod be considered as a Workers' Conference, the Commission believes that its educational value should not be overlooked. It is not desirable that the dioceses should discontinue the selection of Synod delegates, clerical and lay, for the sake of the broader knowledge and personal contacts to be gained by them through attendance upon the Synod.

However, the recognition of the Synod as a Workers' Conference would increase its educational value many times. First, because the Synod would then handle problems, instead of merely talking about them, thus using the most effective educational process, i. e.: the project method. Secondly, the delegates would have real reports to report on, when they returned to their dioceses and parishes, and the Synod would then become an educational agency, not only for those who might attend, but for those at home to whom the proceedings and findings should be reported.

The recommendations approved in the above resolutions were contained in the report of the Commission on Increased Efficiency of the Provincial System in the Province of Sewanee, of which the Chairman was the Rt. Rev. William Mercer Green, D. D., Bishop of Mississippi, and were presented first to the Provincial Council of the Province of Sewanee, which approved them with certain amendments, and recommended their adoption by the Synod. The report of the Commission also contained recommendations concerning the activities of the Provincial Council and the several Provincial Departments. The most important of these was that the Provincial Council should hold an all-day meeting at some time next summer, which should be preceded by all-day meetings of the several Departments. The object of this arrangement was that the Departments might prepare their plans, programs, and budgets in their departmental meetings, and should be able to submit them the next day to the Provincial Council at its meeting. These recommendations, together with others touching the activities of the Provincial Council and the Departments, were referred by the Synod to the Provincial Council for consideration. The Council followed the suggestion of the report in fixing the time of its next meeting, and appointed it for August 1, 1928, at Sewanee, Tenn., the day immediately preceding the opening of the Sewanee Summer Training School.

This last action may be considered as an important step in carrying out the policy of considering the Province as a "Workers' Unit". The Sewanee Summer Training School is already an unofficial Workers' Conference of the Province of Sewanee, bringing together there about five hundred people active in all branches of Church Work in the Province. The fixing of the meetings of the Provincial Departments and Provincial Council on the days immediately preceding the Summer School will bring into even closer touch the responsible leaders in Church work on the one hand, and on the other hand the men, women and young people who are being trained at the Summer School for participation in the Church's work, and, what is equally important, those who are teaching and training them.

Nation-Wide Broadcast of Christmas Carols.

A national radio song service on Christmas Eve, in which the whole country is invited to join in the singing of carols, has been arranged under the auspices of the Federal Council of the Churches with the cooperation of the National Religious Radio Committee.

Leading stations of the country will carry the broadcast, including WEAF, New York City; WGY, Schenectady; WGR, Buffalo; WJAR, Providence; WFI, Philadelphia; WCAE, Pittsburgh; WTIC, Hartford; WWJ, Detroit; WHAS, Louisville; WSB, Atlanta; WTAG, Worcester. It is expected that other stations also will cooperate in the program.

The service begins at 10:30 P. M. and continues until midnight of Saturday, December 24. "Every one," states the program, "is invited to join in singing the old familiar carols as led over the radio, thus uniting in a great nation-wide chorus of praise and joy on Christmas Eve."

$896,941.92 Due.

The December 1 statement shows what each Diocese must do in this last month of the year to make good what it told the National Council to expect on its quota.

The total need is $896,941.92.

The balanced budget of the National Council, under the "pay-as-you-go" plan, is based upon the collection of this entire amount.

The Church must not fail in this task and success or failure rests on the result in each individual Diocese.

What is the standing of your Diocese?

What will it be at the end of the year?

The Virginia Rural Church Survey.

Under the chair of Rural Sociology of the Virginia Polytechnic Institute there has been instituted a survey of the rural church situation in this State. The committee having this survey in charge has on it representatives of all of the religious bodies of the State, as well as many other representative citizens.

Scope of the Survey.

The Executive Committee held several meetings during the year following its appointment to decide on the scope of the survey, principles of procedure, and so on. The most significant of these decisions were:

That the objectives of the study should be to analyze the effectiveness of the activities of the country church and affiliated societies, especially the church young people's organizations, in promoting the best country life and the highest welfare of the country people; to bring out the elements of strength and weakness, and the significant trends.

That the study should cover such points as membership strength; financial support; physical equipment; parish area; duplication of services; ministerial training, conditions of work, support, etc.; community conditions; relationship of church and church societies to community conditions, and to the activities of other community organizations; points of emphasis in church and church associations teachings, leadership.

That in making the survey not only the churches and church societies should be studied, but also the whole setting of community conditions in a number of type situations, including cases where the church and church organizations are doing outstanding work, as well as cases where they are meeting with poor success.

That in addition to these type studies an analysis should be made of the various denominational annual reports and other types of literature in order to correlate significant trends, such an analysis to be supplemented by data collected from the State as a whole through a widely distributed questionnaire.

Work Begun.

The actual field work of the survey was begun June 10, and has been vigorously pushed all the summer.

The direction of the undertaking as a whole is in the hands of W. E. Garnett.

On account of other work being carried on by the Experiment Station's Department of Rural Sociology, it was necessary to confine the church survey at first to: (1) A study of type community situations; (2) a study of young people's organizations. It is planned to undertake the other phases outlined above as soon as practicable. It will take at least a year longer, however, to finish the undertaking as a whole.

Progress Made.

Community, neighborhoods and parish boundaries have been mapped, activities of the church and other organizations have been studied, and general community conditions and tendencies have been analyzed in parts of certain counties, representative of the several geographic regions of the State.

Use of the Results.

At its meeting on October 4 the Survey Executive Committee devoted considerable time to the question of the preparation of a proper seed bed of intelligent understanding of rural life problems and tendencies before the survey report is issued. It was decided that the rural church or other proper committees of each of the sponsoring denominations should be asked to keep the problems of the rural church before their people as much as possible during the coming year; that they be asked to arrange, where possible, to have such questions discussed in their annual State conventions; that they make an effort to have the several church papers carry a series of articles on the rural church and the problems of rural life; that both ministers and laymen be urged to read some of the best literature on this subject during the next year.

Note: Those wishing a concise statement of the more important Virginia rural life problems and tendencies should have a copy of the Virginia Agriculture Experiment Station Bulletin 256. This, together with a list of the best rural life and rural church literature, can be had from the V. P. I. Department of Rural Sociology, Blacksburg, Va., for the asking. Every minister should also have a copy of the statistical study of Virginia, recently prepared by Dr. Wilson Gee, of the University of Virginia.

Toc H House-warming.

Good fellowship, plenty of fun and deep spirituality characterized the official house-warming of the new home of Toc H in Washington, which is now known as Mark I—1324—Eighteenth Street, N. W. These new quarters are the gift of Mrs. K. D. Wiley, who thus has made possible a broader and more far-reaching work for Toc H. At this house-warming ladies were invited, as well as Toc H men and their friends, and though there was a definite program, it was all so informally and generally done that one felt more a part of a large family gathering than as one attending a meeting. Mr. Coleman Jennings, the "job master", presided, and one after another, Toc H boys or some one interested, told something for Toc H. Included in this number were the job masters of the New York and Philadelphia Toc H and three clergymen who have been very close to the Toc H movement in this country, namely, Rev. Mr. Luske, of Ridgeville, Conn., and Bishop Rhinelander and Canon Anson Phelps Stokes, of Washington Cathedral. Toc H boys told of some of the "jobs" which they preferred to call pleasures and which were in reality always some form of social service which they all pledged to do. Toc H songs interspersed the evening. Rev. Mr. Sawbridge, the padre, gave a short talk on the meaning and spirit of Toc H, and the usual lighting of the Lamp of Maintenance, with all other lights out, was followed by the ritual of admitting a new member to Toc H. The inspiration of the whole evening seemed to be epitomized in a talk of Forbes Amory, a Toc H man from Walter Reed Hospital, greatly wounded in body, but greatly lifted up in spirit. After the true Toc H fashion, though greatly handicapped by the effects of his World War wounds, he is working over a large field in this country in the interest of a hospital for the treatment of patients suffering from infantile paralysis. His enthusiasm, his spiritual message and his bearing and the love of all the boys for him are things that were felt there, but cannot be set down in words. Family prayer was said in the chapel downstairs by the padre, to which all present were invited. After this, upstairs in the dining-room, refreshments were served and a social hour enjoyed.

Former Actor, Missioner.

St. Paul's Church, Rock Creek Parish, conducted a mission during the week of December 11, the missioner being Rev. Walter E. Bentley, a former Shakespearean actor. Services were held every afternoon and evening, and on Saturday, December 17, a lecture on "The Church and the Theater" will be given in the parish hall. Prior to this mission, cottage meetings have been held in the various homes in preparation for it.

Thank Offering.

In this year's United Thank Offering for Christ Church, New Bern, N. C., is found the following inspiring event:

"In the purse of one of the splendid Christian women, who passed into Paradise last summer, was found the only written words of instruction she left. The note read that all money in her purse should be turned over to the United Thank Offering. The money was duly presented at the altar as a part of the parish offering. Thus her last wish was kept and her whole unselfish life summed up in that last thought for others rather than for herself."

Garzia Chalice.

The most prized possession of St. Thomas' Church, Bath, N. C., is the Garzia chalice, recently returned to it by the congregation of St. Paul's, Edenton, in whose keeping the ancient chalice had been for many, many years. The chalice bears no date, but has the inscription: "D. D. Johannes Garzia Anglicana Presbyter". The colonial records of the State of North Carolina show that the Rev. John Garzia was sent to the "Parish of Pamlico", in which the Bath church is located, about the year 1734. He served there until his death in 1744. The chalice was used for the first time since its return to St. Thomas' at the service of the Holy Communion during the annual pilgrimage, November 11, 1927, by the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D.

St. Peter's Chapel.

The newly erected chapel of St. Peter's Parish, Washington, N. C., the Rev. Stephen Gardner, rector, was consecrated on November 12 by the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D. The chapel was donated to the parish by Mrs. Laura E. Brown, and dedicated to the memory of her husband, the late Judge George Hubbard Brown. It was erected and equipped at a cost exceeding $30,000.

It is one of the most beautiful chapels in the whole South. The exterior was designed by James Salter, architect of Raleigh, and corresponds with the architecture of the parish house now under construction. The interior is perpendicular gothic, having been planned and executed by R. Geissler, Inc., of New York City.

Banner School.

City Mission Day.

In a letter addressed to all the clergy of the Diocese, Bishop Manning stated:

"It is within the scope of the purpose and methods of our Nation-Wide Campaign that parishes and individuals may make supplementary offerings for specific items in our Diocesan budget. Such offerings will be credited on the parish quota.

"In order to help the City Mission Society and at the same time to secure a larger payment on our Diocesan quota, I shall be very glad if you can consider Sunday, December 11, or Sunday, December 18, as a City Mission Day, on which you can refer to its work and take a special offering."

Attached to the letter from Bishop Manning was a statement to be read in the parishes.

It states in part:

"So many thousands of people are dependent on the Episcopal City Mission Society for spiritual guidance and concrete aid in their extremity that the Board did not reduce the budget for 1927, hoping that increased income could be secured. However, unless special effort be made the income from the parishes will be even less than in 1926, creating a deficit of at least $20,000.

"We are facing just now a winter of more poverty than for several years. At a time when employment is decreasing and winter suffering imminent, it is distressing to contemplate any limitation of the all too meagre help which the Church is extending to the handicapped and the aged.

St. Stephen's College is happy to announce that it has been included on the fully accredited list of the Association of American Universities.

Fiftieth Anniversary.

The Church of the Redeemer, Sayre, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the mission in 1877. From small beginnings it has grown into one of the large parishes of the Diocese. In equipment and endowment there is none better in the Diocesan family. The following clergy have served the Church of the Redeemer: The Rev. G. F. Rosemuller from 1877-1883; the Rev. W. B. Marrow from 1883-1888; the Rev. Leighton Coleman, 1888-1889; the Rev. S. J. French, 1889-1892; the Rev. John H. Griffith, 1895-1898; the Rev. R. M. Doherty, 1898-1899; the Rev. Robert Bell, 1899-1901; the Rev. Frank T. Cady, 1901-1906; the Rev. H. L. Hannah, 1906-1912; the Rev. W. N. Weir, 1912-1927; the Rev. Glen B. Walter came October 1, 1927.

On Saturday, December 3, the parish gave a reception to the new rector and his wife and at the same time celebrated the half century of growth. The ministers of Sayre were invited to attend. Of the Church clergy there were present the Bishop of the Diocese; the Ven. Harvey P. Walter, of Bethlehem; the Rev. Messrs. G. A. Harvey, of Athens; W. E. Daw, L. W. Lunn, of Waverly, N. Y., and F. M. C. Bedell. The papers say the anniversary and reception were the largest attended affairs in the history of the parish.

On Sunday, December 4, the Bishop instituted the Rev. Mr. Walter.

The parish also had its Annual Member Canvass. From the reports thus far brought in the rector assured the Bishop that its full quota for the church's program would be pledged for the first time since the Nation-Wide Campaign was inaugurated.

Church School Christmas Celebration.

On Sunday afternoon, December 18, the Church School of Christ Church, Macon, will present the pantomime, "Why the Chimes Rang". It is a very beautiful and elaborate production in which many members of the parish and the Church School will take part. A feature of the pantomime is the presentation of the gifts of the members of the Church School which represents a part of their work in the community block of service.

GEORGIA.

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop.

Deaths.

Three deaths have occurred this fall in the Diocese of Georgia, two of them being laymen. The first to enter his eternal rest was Mr. James Moultrie Lee, of Savannah, who died September 22. Mr. Lee, up to two years ago, was the faithful and efficient treasurer of the Executive Council of the Diocese. He resigned on account of ill health. It was largely due to Mr. Lee's interest and fidelity, as well as his efficiency as treasurer of the Council, that the finances of the Diocese were so successfully managed and the obligations to the National Council so regular and fully met. His death is a great loss to his parish, Christ Church, Savannah, of which he was a vestryman and treasurer for many years, and many times a delegate from his parish to the Diocesan Convention.

Mr. J. K. McIver, who succeeded Mr. Lee as treasurer of the Executive Council, died suddenly on Sunday night, December 4, at his home near Savannah. Mr. McIver, who was for many years superintendent of the Church School of St. Paul's Church, Savannah, was a devoted member of that parish and of the church. His work as treasurer of the Executive Council followed closely that of his predecessor in office, and was marked by loyalty, efficiency and regularity. The services of these two laymen were given freely to the Diocese.

A retired priest of the Diocese of Georgia, the Rev. Chauncey C. Williams, D. D., entered into rest at Mobile, Ala., October 29. Dr. Williams was for thirty years rector of St. Paul's Church, Augusta, until he retired in 1907. He spent his entire ministry in the Diocese of Georgia, having been ordained deacon in 1874 and priest in 1875. He was successively assistant minister of St. Philip's Church, Atlanta, rector of Christ Church, Macon, and rector of St. Paul's Church, Augusta. From time to time Dr. Williams held every position of honor and responsibility in his Diocese, among them member and president of the Standing Committee and Deputy to the General Convention.

In Honor of the Rev. Samuel B. McGlohon.

Members of the four parishes in Savannah attended St. Paul's Church, November 20, for the evening service to do honor to the rector, the Rev. Samuel M. McGlohon, who on that occasion celebrated the twentieth anniversary of his rectoship of that parish. The church was crowded, and the combined choirs aggregating eighty men and women, rendered the music exceptionally well under the leadership of W. S. Henley, the director of St. Paul's Choir. The rectors of the other three parishes, the Rev. David Cady Wright, D. D., rector of Christ Church; the Rev. W. A. Jonnard, rector of St. John's Church, and the Rev. Henry Bell Hodgkins, rector of St. Michael and All Angels' Church, took part in the service, and Dr. Wright gave the short address, which was chiefly a tribute to Mr. McGlohon, whose activities in behalf of the sick and needy, irrespective of creed, have continued throughout his residence in Savannah. On account of previous appointments, the Bishop of the Diocese could not be present, but in his letter explaining his absence, Bishop Reese likened Mr. McGlohon to the "Good Priest" of the poet Chaucer's description, paraphrased by Dryden who wrote, " 'Wide was his parish, Yet still he was at hand Without request to serve the sick, to succor the distressed' ". The Bishop in his letter bore testimony to Mr. McGlohon as "a loyal Churchman, a consecrated Christian, a friend of God, and consequently a friend of man, who has gone his way quietly and unobtrusively, doing good to all men as opportunity made possible and need required". Mr. McGlohon's rectorship has been marked by three particular things of importance, over-coming the removal of the church building from one part of town to another site; the wiping out of a debt of $17,000 and the education of the parish in giving to missions from an entirely parochial viewpoint.

E. D. J.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D. Bishop.

Reception.

Bishop Darlington made his annual visitation to St. Paul's Parish, Philipsburg, on November 13, and administered Confirmation. On the preceding Saturday evening a reception was held in the parish for the Bishop, and for the rector, Archdeacon Eastment, who will retire from the active ministry on January 1, 1927. During Archdeacon Eastment's career of forty years in the Priesthood of the Church he has had but three parishes. His first parish was Canton, Pa., where he served for ten years. In Lewistown, Pa., he was rector for ten years, and in Philipsburg, Pa., twenty years. In each of these parishes beautiful churches have been built during his incumbency.

The reception was presided over by George W. Zeigler, of Philipsburg. Music was furnished by the Russian Orthodox Choir, of Osceola Mills, Pa., and by the orchestra of the Philipsburg High School. Addresses were given by the following ministers of the town: The Rev. S. B. Evans, of the Methodist Church; the Rev. Ernest L. Lee, Lutheran; the Rev. E. B. Learish, United Brethren; the Rev. Charles F. Kulp, Baptist; the Rev. Ralph Illingworth, Presbyterian; the Rev. Willoughby M. Parchment, of Altoona; and the Rev. Andrew Didick, of the Russian Orthodox Church of Osceola Mills, Pa. Letters of regret from many other ministers and their wives were read.

Resolutions of the congregation, passed and signed by the vestry, and handsomely mounted on a scroll, were then presented to the rector by the Senior Warden, P. E. Womelsdorff. Albert Walton, vestryman, presented Archdeacon Eastment with a purse of gold as a slight tribute of esteem from the members of his parish. The final address was made by Bishop Darlington.

A. A. H.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland, D. D., Bishop.

Francis A. Lewis, widely known banker and financier and Churchman, died November 29 at his home in Haverford. He was prominent in practically every branch of civic life in Philadelphia, and an active worker for the church, as trustee of the Diocesan Christmas Fund, a vestryman of St. Peter's Church and accounting warden of the Church of St. James the Less. For twenty-five years he was a delegate to the General Convention. He held the presidency of the Union Benevolent Society, was manager of the Episcopal Hospital and vice-president of the Corporation for the Relief of Widows and Children of Deceased Clergymen. He was buried from Old St. Peter's Church on December 1.

WESTERN NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. Chas. L. Brent, D. D., Bishop.
Rt Rev. D. L. Ferris, D. D., Coadjutor.

Radio.

The Rev. James Cosbey, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, of Buffalo, N. Y., has made arrangements, with the assistance of other clergymen, to continue broadcasting, during the winter, morning prayer service from the studio of WKBW. Dr. Cosbey conducts the service the first Sunday in each month, the following Sundays being taken by the Rev. Mr. Carrie, of St. Luke's Church; the Rev. Dr. Jessup, of St. Paul's Cathedral, and the Rev. Mr. Byrd, of St. Paul's, Fort Erie, Canada. Much credit is due Dr. Cosbey for his efficient efforts to establish and maintain this feature of religious radio service, so apreciated by "shut-ins". Station WKBW will soon be operating on 5,000 watts of power, thus enabling people at great distance to enjoy the benefits of this short inspirational service.

M. Y. T.

Union Service.

The annual union Thanksgiving Day service of the Methodist, Episcopal, Baptist, Free Methodist and Episcopal Churches of Forestville, N. Y., was held in St. Peter's Episcopal Church on November 24, with the Rev. Charles J. Burton as the preacher. These same churches, with the exception of the Free Methodist, hold union services the last evening in each month, with each minister preaching in his own church, whilst the others assist in the reading of the Scriptures and a prayer.

These services are always very well attended.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Coadjutor.

Corporate Communions.

This Diocese cooperated in the Tenth Annual Nation-Wide Corporate Communion for men and boys fostered by the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. Special Corporate Communions were held in a number of parishes, including Ascension, Grace and St. Peter's, St. John's, Waverly, Cathedral of the Incarnation and the Church of the Messiah. At the last named church a special sermon was preached by the Rev. Arthur M. Sherman, of China.

ALABAMA.

Rt. Rev. C. M. Beckwith, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. G. McDowell, D. D., Coadjutor.

Lay Evangelism.

Thirty-three clergy and one hundred and fifty laymen, representing nearly every parish and mission in the Diocese, attended the conference on Lay Evangelism, held November 30-December 1, in St. John's Church, Montgomery, the Rev. Richard Wilkinson, D. D., rector.

The conference was conducted by the Rt. Rev. T. C. Darst, D. D., of East Carolina, and Dr. W. L. Glazebrook, a prominent physician of Washington, D. C.

All who attended these conferences were profoundly impressed, gaining a new vision on a layman's part in the advancement of the Kingdom.

Thank Offering.

Twice a year at West Blocton, Ala., seven women of the Auxiliary meet to offer the contents of their United Thank Offering boxes. Last summer West Blocton was burned out, stores and homes, with only a fringe of dwellings left; total loss, no insurance. Yet the seven came, bearing their Thank Offering for the half-year, $62, thankful no one had been burned. One woman brought a mass of fused coins, the contents of her Blue Box, dug from the ruins.

NEW MEXICO.

Rt. Rev. F. B. Howden, D. D., Bishop.

St. Anne's Mission.

"To express the Life of Jesus Christ to the Children of God" is the wording on the cornerstone of the new building, erected by the National Council, to house the activities of St. Anne's Mission, El Paso, Texas, which for the past five years has struggled in a little adobe house, situated in the center of about 50,000 Mexicans, to meet the demands made upon it by these people from across the border. During the five years of its life, the work demanded of it has grown by leaps and bounds, until now about six hundred patients pass through its clinic each month. Truly Miss Aline Moise Conrad, R. N., who has been in active charge of the work for the past three years, has been under a terrible strain; and it is she, who has emphasized to the Church the value and meaning of the words on the cornerstone of the new building.

The new building, of beautiful Spanish type, has two wings, connected by a patio. One wing is to house the waiting room, two operating rooms and a clinic room on the first floor and complete living quarters for the workers on the second floor. The other wing will take care of the Kindergarten, social gatherings and the Church School; while located in the patio will be a shrine with full chancel furnishings. The building will fill a long-felt want in the Church work amon gthe foreign and native-born Spanish-Americans. The various parishes and missions in the district have undertaken to furnish the living quarters of the workers; while it is hoped that some kind friends on the outside will assist in furnishing surgical instruments.

St. Andrew's.

St. Andrew's, Roswell, N. M., after having been a mission for thirty years, has taken upon itself the responsibilities of a self-supporting parish. Instead of merely raising $600 necessary for this step, the communicants raised nearly $1,000 more than had been raised previously for the support of the mission. The third Confirmation class during 1927 is now being prepared for presentation to the Bishop on December 11.

D. J. W.

WESTERN MICHIGAN.

Rt. Rev. J. N. McCormick, D. D., Bishop.

The Every-Member Canvass throughout the Diocese is practically completed, and seems to have been quite successful. Several parishes report a very considerable increase over last year.

J. E. W.

SPRINGFIELD.

Paid in Full.

St. John's Church, Decatur, the Rev. Stanley Allan Macdonell, rector, is the first parish in the Diocese to have paid in full by this date every obligation in Diocesan assessment and missionary money for the year 1927.

In Mr. Macdonell's letter in the December issue of the Diocesan paper he pays tribute to the leadership and faithfulness of his vestrymen, what he calls the Senior Guild, St. Martha's Guild, the Altar Guild, the choir, the Church School and the Chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

F. H. S.

Fire.

The Diocese has just suffered a loss in the complete destruction by fire of its new church building at Herrin. Practically the entire loss is covered by insurance, but a fire of this kind always entails losses which are not covered by insurance. The local clergyman lost practically all of his own personal effects, some of which were insured.

Arrangements have been made for the holding of services in the Elks' Building until such time as a new place is provided for.

This loss is taken by the leaders of the Diocese to be simply a challenge to redouble the Diocesan efforts in this field of missionary endeavor and a new St. John's will shortly take its place.

Collect for Fourth Sunday in Advent.

O Lord, raise up, we pray Thee, Thy power, and come among us, and with great might, succor us; that whereas through our sins and wickedness, we are sore let and hindered in running the race that is set before us, Thy bountiful grace and mercy may speedily help and deliver us; through the satisfaction of Thy Son our Lord, to Whom with Thee and the Holy Ghost, be honor and glory, world without end. Amen.

Collect for St. Thomas' Day.

Almighty and ever-living God, Who, for the great confirmation of the faith, didst suffer Thy holy Apostle Thomas to be doubtful in Thy Son's resurrection, Grant us so perfectly, and without all doubt, to believe in Thy Son Jesus Christ, that our faith in Thy sight may never be reproved. Hear us, O Lord, through the same Jesus Christ, to Whom, with Thee and the Holy Ghost, be all honor and glory, now and forevermore. Amen.

Lo, I Come.

Dean Alford.

I know not if He come at eve,
  Or night, or morn, or noon;
I know the breeze of twilight gray
That fans the cheek of dying day,
  Doth ever whisper—Soon!

I know not why our souls should doubt
  His promise to appear,
When every flower's opening eye
Looks up into the changing sky,
  And seems to murmur—Near!

I know not round His blessed feet
  What perfect glories throng;
I only know from rending tomb,
The good shall burst, in beauty's bloom;
  And faith assures—Not long!

I know not if His chariot wheels
  Yet near or distant are;
I only know each thunder-roll
Doth wake an echo in my soul,
  That saith—Not very far!

I know not if we long must wait
  The summer of His smile;
I only know that hope doth sweep
With thrilling touch my heart-strings deep
  And sings—A little while!

I know not on this glorious theme
  Why lips so oft are dumb;
I only know the saddened earth
Will flush with beauty and with mirth
  At sound of Lo, ! come!

—Dean Alford.

Three Stages of Christmas.

The Christmas season has in the case of this writer passed through three quite distinct stages. It is possible that this is true also of quite a number under whose eyes this may fall. First of all was the Christmas of childhood days. Many years have passed, years filled with duties, responsibilities, joys, griefs, all manner and all variety of human experiences. None the less, as we sit today at our desk those days come back in memory with a clearness of detail that is almost startling. The scenes that are recalled were laid in a quiet and remote country section. They date in the middle sixties, during a part of which Virginia was engulfed in the great war of 61-65 and during the other part of which the old State was struggling up out of overwhelming disaster and ruin. Notwithstanding all this, all the horrors of war, and of the collapse which followed, the Christmas season was joyous, at any rate for the little ones. To be sure its joys were simple. Expenditures for the celebration of the season were very limited, but the traditional stocking was hung at Christmas Eve and the eager boy or girl was glad to find in it bright and early Christmas morning something like these; a big red apple, an orange, a bunch of raisins, a little striped peppermint candy, a few home-made cakes and in the war years a handful of chestnuts, which became a little later a handful of almonds, pecans and palm nuts, known then as "niggertoes". This would about conclude the list of presents for the youngsters, but if any precocious child of the present time should smile at its simplicity, let him be assured that the zest with which the children of that day enjoyed these simple things is fully equal to that with which the more sophisticated boy at the present time welcomes his more elaborate and costly gifts.

In that period, in spite of war's rude alarms and of its disastrous results, the Christmas table was well laden. The inevitable turkey was at hand, the country ham was on deck, oysters of the finest quality were in abundance, the open fires burned brightly, often the snow had cast its white mantle over all the earth, hiding its ugliness and deformity, and, better than all, the tide of youthful blood ran high in our veins and the simple winter sports of the countryside were keenly relished. Alas, how far away and yet how near it all seems!

A later stage of the Christmas season came when the boy had grown to be a man and had made his own home and had his own children around him. Then the season brought a new kind of pleasure. Childhood, with all its innocence and attractiveness, is essentially selfish. Little children are thinking about what the Christmas will bring them. Alas, too many grown folks are probably looking forward with the same sort of selfish anticipations to this season which is now so near at hand. But many of them are not. Fathers and mothers will gather their brood about them and will find their chief pleasure in seeing the little faces glow and in hearing the little voices cry out with delight as one after another the gifts of the season are bestowed. It is good to have one season in the year—it would be good indeed to have many—when we are thinking more of the comfort and happiness of others than we are of our own. The Christ-spirit, the spirit of Him who went about doing good, is more abroad at the Christmas season than at any other.

The stage of Christmas experiences of which we are now speaking is a third of a century nearer to us than the earliest stage and is full of pleasant memories, though somehow they are not quite so sharp and clear. In hundreds and thousands of homes the experiences of twenty-five and thirty years ago will be repeated at this season. Parents will watch with a glow of exquisite delight the joy, the hilarity, of their children, and let us hope that on the vast majority of these homes no shadow may fall. It must be mentioned, however, that the Christmas of the second period was a more elaborate and complex affair than that of the first.

Now the third stage has come in one home at least. The children are all grown and married. They come back to the parental roof for a brief season, and their coming is in itself a Christmas joy beyond computation. But they bring with them the third generation, six of them, and everybody knows that the chief folk in that large family circle will be the little folk and everybody will understand anew the meaning of that ancient word, "and a little child shall lead them". And so the grandchildren—think of it—take charge. But nobody expects them now to be content with the red apple, the orange, etc. These indeed they have whenever they wish them. Now they must have more costly, elaborate novelties, mechanical and other. Yet the childish laugh will ring out and the joy of the childish hearts will be just as merry and just as contagious as ever.

How blest all of us are in the memories of other and vanished days and in the simple and wholesome pleasures of the present time. What a blessed Saviour He was who brought into a world of gloom and darkness so much of light and gladness. Nowhere, save where the spirit of the Lord Jesus reigns, is there a season of the year when the vast majority of our people are thinking of how to give pleasure to others rather than to provide pleasure for themselves. Why not make this approaching Christmas an occasion for resolving quite earnestly that we will take the spirit of the Christmastide into all the rest of the year?—Dr. R. H. Pitt in Religious Herald.

The Calendar of God.

The Book says, "When the fullness of time was come, God sent forth His Son". Christmas is the evidence that God keeps His promises; that when the clock strikes He makes His word good All down the ages form the days in Eden, when man fell, there was a voice of promise. For thousands of years men kept heart because God had made a promise. There was weary waiting, hours when the heart grew sick, when the moaning, groaning, crushed, sin-stricken race was in despair, and cried out, "How long, O Lord, how long"? The time was not complete. God's time had not come. And on the years swept, until the great Christmas morning when the angels sang over the new-born Babe of Bethlehem. It was God's time because it was man's time. Christ came to a prepared earth and at the very hour when He ought to have come.

Rome had reached her height of glory and of shame. Greece had sent forth her matchless gems of beauty in philosophy and romance and poetry, but her heart was eaten away by her sins. Israel stood weeping over her once glorious temple, now under the control of aliens, fighting until the streets ran red with blood over questions that meant naught to the ancient glory she had lost. Even the heathen poets sang the story of the Messiah's coming, and philosophers declared the earth needed to be touched by the presence of God walking among men. It was at this noonday of need, when peace was abroad in all the earth, and but one tongue was used among the scholars of the world, that God sent His Son. "In the nick of time," we say. God was ready and the world was ready, and the far-off promise of Eden found its fulfillment in the stable of the inn. God kept His promise, and this Christmas means that God will always keep His promises and never forsake His children.—Selected.

Daybreak.

Like silver dawn upon a world unfolding
So doth Thy Kingdom come,
Ethereal jewels dazzled eyes beholding
Nor reckoning the sun.

As morning breaking on the eye of slumber
So doth Thy love appear,
When in the doubt that doth my soul encumber
I learn to find Thee near.

An early toiler to the fields is wending
Upon a fragrant way,
Praise to the skies for life abundant sending
And for the light of day.

And earth rejoices in the glow extending O'er river, mountain, plain,
In fruitful gladness on the glades descending
For man's immortal gain.

Swift as the light of heaven's high altar bringing Devotion's humblest crumb,
Love blends earth's sorrow with the soul's sweet singing
"Lord, let Thy Kingdom come".

When Is Man Educated?

When he can look out upon the universe, now lucid and lovely, now dark and terrible, with a sense of his own littleness in the great scheme of things, and yet have faith and courage. When he knows how to make friends and keep them, and above all, when he can keep friends with himself. When he loves flowers, can hunt the birds without a gun and feels the stir of a forgotten joy in the laugh of a child. When star-crowned trees, and the glint of sunlight on flowing waters, subdue him like the memory of one much loved and long dead. When he can be happy alone, and high-minded amid the meaner drudgeries of life. When he can look into a wayside puddle and see something besides mud, and into the face of the most forlorn mortal and see something beyond sin. When he knows how to live, how to love, how to hope, how to pray—glad to live and not afraid to die, in his hand a sword for evil, in his heart a bit of a song.—Joseph Fort Newton.

Heathen Logic.

It would seem strange to you to meet a freshman at home who had never heard of Jesus and did not know that there was such a book as a Bible, wouldn't it? But many who enter the University of Nanking are like that. One of the missionaries who teaches Bible there told me last night of one such boy who entered her class. She said after she had been teaching the class only a short time and had not felt that the time had come to ask if any wanted to take a stand for Christ, that one of the boys came to see her and said, "I want to be a Christian. I didn't know before that there was anybody like Christ, but I want to be like Him. I can't understand why everybody wouldn't want to follow Him, as soon as they hear about Him."—Virginia M. Richardson.

Christmas-Tide.

Isabel Hicks Ellis.

O holy, happy season,
So full of joy and cheer;
We love the sounds and odors
That tell us it is near.

We love the wreaths and flowers
That homes and church adorn,
We love the happy faces
That greet us Christmas morn.

We love the children's service;
Their songs and sparkling trees;
The Church's Midnight Vigil,
Bowed heads, adoring knees.

We love the sacred music;
The joyful bells that ring.
We love to lift our voices
In praises to our King.

We love the lighted Altar;
Its mysteries we revere;
We love to gather round it
And feel Christ's Presence near.

We love the Gospel story
Of Jesus' wondrous birth,
How angels, at His coming,
Sang, "Peace, good will on earth."

We love the blessed message
God's Holy Word imparts,
That Jesus, born of Mary,
Still dwells in humble hearts.

We love to help the needy,
By doing so we bring
An offering to our Saviour,
From whom all blessings spring.

How Elsie Earned Christmas Money.

Little Elsie Blake ran into the room where her mother was sitting, and almost out of breath said: "Oh, mother, the girls in my Sunday-school class are to help make a poor family comfortable for the winter. Please give me some money."

"But if I gave you the money," said her mother, "you will not be helping them. I shall be the one."

"But where shall I get it if you or father do not give it to me? I have spent all of my allowance, and I want it before my next is due."

"You must earn it," said her mother; "that is the only way you can truly give anything. Tomorrow you can work half an hour before school in the morning and half an hour at noon. I have a large bag of pieces which you can look over and sort the woolen from the cotton and silk and tie them in neat bundles. Then we will see what you can do after that."

The next morning Elsie was up bright and early and began her work, and at night she said to her mother: "I have finished the work you gave me and have thought of something else. Mrs. Brown's nurse is sick, and she has no one to wheel the baby. Perhaps she would let me do that in the morning, and at noon I could hurry from school, and I will be very careful with the baby."

And sure enough, Mrs. Brown was very glad to have her. At the end of the week Elsie had all her own earnings to give towards helping the poor family.

After she returned from giving the money she said to her mother: "I had a very pleasant feeling about giving that money, because I worked to get it. Could you find something to do that would help you and give me a few pennies for each week? Then the next time I am asked to give I shall have something saved."

Her mother was very much pleased, because Elsie spent her pennies very freely and never thought about any one having to earn them. The next day her mother told her she could look over the clothes when they came from the laundry and put away those that did not need mending, and all that needed buttons she could attend to; then she would teach her to darn and then she could mend the stockings.

Elsie was pleased, and before long she was a good helper for her mother, who was proud of her daughter's thriftiness. And the next Christmas Elsie had earned all the money for her presents for the family. Wasn't that nice?

The Icing Dish.

"Who wants to scrape this dish?" It was Mother's voice calling, and Gertrude dropped the scissors with which she had been cutting out paper dolls, and ran to the kitchen.

"I do, I do!" she cried, hopping up and down on her toes.

Now, Mother always let Gertrude and her sister, Louise, scrape the dish when she had finished icing a cake. Sometimes she left a ring of the soft, foamy sweetness all around the edge of the dish. You could run your finger along it, and the icing would curl up over it My, but it was delicious!

Mother smiled at her little daughter's eagerness, and gave the cake one final flourish with the last spoonful of icing.

"Here you are, dear," she said, pushing the plate toward Gertrude. "Find Louise and scrape it together."

Gertrude grabbed the tempting remains and the thickly coated spoon and hurried toward the playroom. Now, when she started, she had fully intended to go directly to Louise and share the dish. But she could hear her sister talking to her dolls in the playroom, so she stood a moment in the hallway undecided. The icing dish in her hands looked so good, and that spoon! Oh, dear, there wasn't a great deal of it. Mother had cleaned up the plate more than usual. Really, there was only enough for one person. She listened again to her sister's voice. Louise seemed to be having a fine time alone with her dolls. Maybe she wouldn't like it if she rushed into the playroom suddenly. Perhaps she ought not to bother her. She might be playing church and would be angry if disturbed. Good! Then she, Gertrude, would tiptoe up the attic stairs and clean up the icing dish all by herself.

Very quietly she climbed the stairs. It was stuffy and close up there, but it wouldn't take long to finish the icing.

She sat down on a trunk, the dish planted firmly on her knees, and tasted the spoon. Smack, smack, went her lips all over it! It was just about the best frosting Mother had ever made, she thought.

A little mouse scurried across the floor. He stopped in front of her and winked his beady eyes at her.

"You want some of my icing?" asked Gertrude, holding up the sticky spoon.

She poed up a tiny ball with her finger and flipped it at him. He grabbed it and scampered away in a hurry.

"Oh, dear, just look what I've done!" thought the little girl. "I've shared the icing with a mouse, and I wouldn't share it with my own sister. What a selfish little pig I am!"

Down from the trunk she jumped and hurried across the attic floor.

"Gertie! Gertie!"

Who could that be calling her? She ran down the stairs so fast she nearly tumbled. There was no one in the hall.

"Gertie, where are you? I'm giving the dolls a tea party. Come on in the playroom and help me serve."

It was Louise calling. Gertrude looked at the dish in her hand. She hadn't eaten a bit of that yet, only the spoon she had licked.

"I'm coming, Louise," she answered. "And I've got something perfectly grand for the tea party." She fairly burst into the playroom, holding the plate in her outstretched hands. "Look, Louise, Mother said we could scrape the dish. We'll make icing balls for the dolls."

"Oh, yes, and eat them ourselves, of course," said Louise. "Oh, my, isn't this fun!"

"Icing balls, smooth and fine
Pop into your mouth,
Pop into mine."

How happy and glad Gertrude felt! And how long that icing candy lasted! Louise believes it is because they made it up into candy balls, but Gertrude thinks it is because she shared it.—Christian Observer.

December.

Earth lies buried
Deep in snow.
Stars like candles
Are aglow.

One is bright
Than the rest,
See it gleaming
In the West.

Now I wonder
If that star
Guided wise men
From afar.

Guided shepherds,
Bringing them
All at last to Bethlehem.

There to find a
Baby sweet
Fall and worship
At His feet.

If the same, O
Star so bright,
Let us follow
In the light.

Find and keep that Child so dear
In our hearts through
All the year.

The Story of a Little Seed.

Once upon a time there was a tall milkweed that stood in a fence corner at the very edge of a large wood. As the summer advanced, the milkweed was covered with long greed pods; and by and by these pods burst open, and dozens upon dozens of tiny seeds with soft, downy tips, came peeping out. "My children, my lovely little seed children," murmured the milkweed, as she swayed to and fro in the summer breeze, "you must fly away now and leave me, one by one. But the good God meant that every one of you should sink down into the cool, damp earth and grow up to be a big, splendid milkweed just as I am".

"And so we will; and so we will!" cried all the downy seeds together; "we will not forget what you have told us. Good-bye, dear mother, good-bye." Just then a gay little breeze came dashing by and caught them up in his arms and away they flew, here and there and everywhere. But wherever a seed dropped into the cold, damp earth, the milkweed mother knew that a tall, splendid plant like herself would be growing next summer.

One little seed, smaller than the others, with downy wings that glistened in the sun, shrank back into the green pod and refused to go with the rest. "I like the sunshine and the pure, sweet air and the bright blue sky," she cried; "don't cast me on the ground, Mr. Wind, but take me sailing away and away, ever and ever so far!"

Now the wind was a jolly, rollicking fellow, so crying, "All right, here we go!" he caught her up and carried her off in a hurry. On and on she flew with breathless haste, through the woods and over the brook to a wheat field that stood fair and shining in the sun. At last she caught on a prickly ear of wheat and hung there, breathless.

"And who are you?" she cried at last, when she was rested enough to speak.

"I am a stalk in a wheat field," answered the wheat politely.

"And how came you here?" said the seed gazing admiringly down at the long, yellow stalk.

"Oh, I was a tiny grain once," said the wheat. "But a farmer planted me in the cool, damp earth, and I grew up to be the splendid stalk that you see."

"I don't want to be planted," said the little seed saucily, "I had much rather fly about in the sunshine. Take me up again, Mr. Wind," and away she flew.

When she stopped again, after a long, glorious flight, she caught on the rough bark of a broad, graceful tree, covered with green leaves and luscious summer fruit.

"And who are you?" she asked again.

"I am an apple tree," said the big tree, kindly.

"An apple tree, and how come you here, pray," asked the seed.

"Oh, I was just a tiny apple seed once," said the tree, "but I sank into the cool, damp earth just here, and now I have grown into a great, broad tree and bear ever so many delicious apples every year of my life."

"That's all very well," said the little seed, "but I like better to fly in the sunshine," and away she went, rolling and tumbling and laughing in the summer breeze.

She flew back into the large, dark forest this time, and when she stopped again she found herself in the arms of a great forest tree, larger and more splendidly than any she had ever seen.

"And who are you?" she asked of the big, rough tree."

"And who are you?" she asked of the big, rough tree.

"I am an oak," was the answer in big, kindly tones.

"And where did you come from?" asked the seed.

"Oh, I was nothing but an acorn once," said the tree, "but I sank into the cool, damp earth just here, and now I am a great fine tree, with ever so many birds nesting in my branches."

Just then the seed looked down into a hollow in the great, gnarled branches and saw a little brown something, ugly and shriveled and old.

"And who are you?" she said with a little shrug of contempt.

"Oh, I am an acorn," came the answer in a shrill, cracked voice, "a last yearn's acorn that didn't want to be planted. Just see how safely I am hiding."

The tiny seed looked at the poor, wizened acorn, and at the big splendid oak, and hung very quietly in her place for a long, long time. At last she called out, very gently: "Take me down to the cool, damp earth, Mr. Wind, for I want to be a milkweed like my mother!"

"All right," said the good-natured wind and away she flew.—The King's Builders.

The Secret of Christmas.

What does Christmas meant to you,
My pretty lass, with the eyes so blue?
A doll, a book, a ribbon, a ring,
That this day of gifts is going to bring
A feast with games and song and fun,
Where you are ever the foremost one;
A time when all is merry and gay—
Is this the meaning of Christmas Day.

What does Christmas mean to you,
My frank-faced lad, with brow so true?
A holiday full of gifts and toys
And jolly fun with the other boys?
A frolic the freest of all the year,
A table heaped with the best of cheer,
And skating or snow or hearty play—
Is this the meaning of Christmas Day?

Ah, bright are the hours of this happy time,
And gay is the ring of the Christmas chime,
Yet through it all must whisper still "Glory to God, to men good will";
And in every heart, of girl or boy,
Must be the holy Christmas joy
Before we can gladly and truly say,
"I have learned the meaning of Christmas Day".

More Than a Station.

"You never did try to make your home a station, Eleanor," said grandmother. "Make my home a station! What can you mean?"

"Well, there are young people who seem to make home a station—a sort of stopping place, you know, where they can wait when one excitement is over until the next excitement is on," said grandmother. "They do not give much thought to making the home brighter. They merely stop there, and are restless to be off again. But I must say that you are different, Eleanor. You live in your home and you have a real interest in it. You help in it and bring gladness and good times to it, instead of simply waiting in it betweenwhiles for you own good times."

Eleanor's face looked happy. "It was worthwhile to stay home yesterday afternoon with little sister, who was in bed with a cold, instead of going for a hike with the girls," she thought.—Queens Gardens.

"Hearts need fond words to help them on their way;
Caresses, pleasant looks, to cheer each passing day;
Then hoard them not until they useless be;
In life—not death—
Speak kindly. Living hearts need sympathy."

Trying to Explain It

The remarkable results secured by patrons of the Income Building Plan is due to the fact that they become interested in accumulating bonds and with great reluctance part with them. The 6 per cent compound interest every six months on units of $100 automatically invested in first mortgage bonds explains the attraction, as does the simplicity of the plan and the record of results in the back of the pass book.

My Nest.

Some nights, when I lie down to rest,
I think about the bluebird's nest
That just outside my window pane
Is tossing in the wind and rain.

And then I cuddle snug and warm
To shut away the night and storm,
And make believe I'm in a nest
Against the mother bluebird's breast.

And presently, beneath her wing,
Into the dark I seem to swing
Far to and fro, until it seems
I swing into the land of dreams.

The promises of God, scattered throughout the Bible, are like the stars in the firmament; if it were always day we should not know that the sky was so full of them, but when night approaches they begin to shine. When the night of affliction overtakes the child of heaven the promises of God are seen to shine forth one after another in the firmament of His Word.

No Night.

There is no night when God is nigh,
Nor any unrequited sigh,
No rending of the robe of peace,
No agony of life's release,
Nor any long unanswered cry.

Unto the Lord of earth and sky
The soul on faith's strong wings may fly,
Where blindness finds on bended knees
There is no night.

In silence like a shadow bye
He speaks in love's serene reply,
To bid the troubling sorrows cease,
And wake the soul to life's increase,
For when the last hours slowly die
There is no night.

You Know?

That many of the great Bible teachers of the present day were set straight in their knowledge of the Word of God by a little booklet by Dr. C. I. Scofield called

"RIGHTLY DIVIDING THE WORD OF TRUTH"?
(The original Edition)

God has wonderfully used this series of ten lectures, fundamental to a clear understanding of the Bible:

1. The Jew, the Gentile and the Church of God.
2. The Seven Dispensations.
3. The Two Advents.
4. The Two Resurrections.
5. The Five Judgments.
6. Law and Grace.
7. The Believer's Two Natures.
8. The Believer's Standing and State.
9. Salvation and Rewards.
10. Believers and Professors.

God certainly gave us this little book through his servant—not added revelation but Spirit-given interpretation.

Here are a few out of many letters, showing how much this little booklet has helped.

"* * I praise God for its marvelous ministry, and hope you can spread this still further."—C. G. Trumbell, Editor Sunday-School Times.

"To my great loss I did not know the book until late in my ministry."—James M. Gray.

Deaths

THOMAS RICE JACKSON.

Entered into eternal rest, Trursday, October 20, 1927, at Montrose, Va., in the fifty-fifth year of his life, THOMAS RICE JACKSON, son of the late Samuel R. and years Mr. Jackson was vestryman of St. James Church and during that time served Church and during that time served twenty years as Junior Warden, and for past seven years was Senior Warden.

He was a native of Westmoreland county and had spent most of his life at Montross, the County seat, where he was engaged in business and was among the county's most widely known and esteemed citizens.

He married Ethel A. Sandy, who, with four daughters and a son survives him. He leaves also one brother and two sisters.

An earnest follower of Christ, faithful member of his church, a loyal husband, a devoted father, a true friend and a splendid citizen, honorable in all business relations, his passing has caused general and genuine regret.

Genial, sympathetic and companionable, singularly steadfast and sincere, his life was a moral straight line—the shortest distance between man and God.

"I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness."

T. P. B.

REV. JAMES E. W. COOK.

The REV. JAMES E. W. COOK, rector of St. Paul's Church, Greenville, N. C., died December 7, 1927, after being critically ill for several weeks. After the funeral service in St. Paul's Church, which was conducted by the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop of East Carolina, assisted by the Rev. Robert B. Drane, D. D., of Edenton, and the Rev. Stephen Gardner, of Washington, N. C., the remains were carried to Wilmington, N. C., where interment was made with funeral rites of the Masonic fraternity.

Mr. Cook was born in Tetbury, England, in 1862, and spent the first thirty years of his life in that country. Thirty-five years ago he came to America and engaged in business. At the age of sixty he was accepted as a candidate for Holy Orders; and, after taking the regular examinations, including Greek, and without any dispensations, was ordained to the Diaconate and finally to the Priesthood. His first charge, after entering the ministry, was that of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Wilmington, N. C.; and following his ministry there was archdeacon of the diocese, serving mission stations and supplying wherever he was needed. Late in 1923 he accepted a call to the recorate of St. Paul's Church, Greenville, where he served until his death.

He brought into the ministry a deeply consecrated life and rare intelectual attainments. Everyone who heard him was impressed by his power of effective expression and spiritual interpretation of life. He was one of the national crusaders in New Hampshire during the Bishops' Crusade last February. He was associate editor of the Mission Herald, official organ of the diocese, a member of the Standing Committee of the diocese, and one whose judgment and character were highly esteemed in the many walks of lif which he so conspicuously served.

He had been appointed Grand Orator of the A. F. and A. M. of the Grand Jurisdiction of the State of North Carolina, and would have delivered the annual oration to the Grand Lodge in Raleigh in January, 1928. He was a member of both the York and Scottish rite bodies of Masonry, and in the latter was a State Lecturer and had attained the honorary degree of K. C. C. H. He was also a member of the Greenville Kiwanis Club and the Knights of Pythias order.

He is survived by his wife and two sons, B. P. and H. J. Cook, of Camden, N. C.; and five daughters, Mrs. Harry Lucia, Mrs. M. H. Weppler, of Blackwood, N. J.; Mrs. E. L. Johnson, of Camden, N. J.; Mrs. C. Roger Morse, of Wilmington, N. C., and Miss Margaret Cook, of Greenville, N. C.

MISS ANNA MARIA BOWIE CHEW.

ANNA MARIA BOWIE CHEW peacefully entered into her Eternal Rest on Wednesday morning at hree-thirty December the seventh, at the home of her sister, Mrs. O. B. Zantzinger, 3307 R Street, Northwest, Washington, D. C., after an illness of several months. She was the daughter of Judge Richard Benjamin Brookes Chew and Louisa Daingerfield Brookes, of "Ellerslie", near Upper Marlboro, Prince George's County, Maryland, and the great-granddaughter of Major Benjamin Brookes, of Revolutionary fame, and all through her life her bravery and strength of character proved her to be the descendant of a distinguished soldier. During her late illness, though a great sufferer, her peace of mind and faith never faltered—proving her a true soldier of Christ.

To her many friends the memory of her good deeds will always be an inspiration.

"Numbered with Thy Saints
This planet set; but an afterglow remains,
Reflected—her influence will extend to generations, perhaps beyond,
Not dead, but living unto Thee."

REV. MURRAY WILDER DEWART.

The REV. MURRAY W. DEWART, Rector of Christ Church, Baltimore, was stricken with a sudden heart attack after his 11 o'clock service on Sunday, December the 4th, and died almost immediately. He had been suffering from heart trouble for a year and had recently returned from a six month's leave of absence. The funeral yas conducted in his own church on Wednesday, December the 7th, by The Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, Bishop of Maryland, and The Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, Bishop of Delaware. The service was a beautiful and triumphant Christian conclusion to a noble life. The chancel was banked with white flowers and the choir sang Easter hymns.

Mr. Dewart came to Christ Church, Baltimore, only five years ago from the Church of the Epiphany, Winchester, Mass., but in that time had made himself a power in the community. His influence extended far beyond the confines of his own parish, which in itself is one of the larger down-town churches, for he was well known as a speaker for men and had formed large contacts in the business world. The respect in which he was held is well indicated in the following editorial published in the "Baltimore Sun":

"Baltimore can ill afford the loss of The Reverend Dr. Murray W. Dewart. His honest facing of facts, his loyalty to his convictions and his earnest advocacy of them were making him known to many beside his parishioners.

"One rememberes him for that recent graphic illustration of his efforts to see reality—his recital of how, as chaplain in wartime, he had explained to many a man what the great war was about, whereas he had come to feel that those ignorant soldiers were wiser than he. For at last he realized that he also did not know. He had the honesty, and the courage in exhibiting it, of Sir William Robertson, to whom war appears 'a fool's game'.

"His courage, indeed, marked him. It is no light matter to take seriously what many a man agrees to set aside as unimportant or insoluble, and yet he spoke with conviction in his efforts to make religion a vital force in every element of human behavior.

He made much of the simple virtues—honesty, humility, love. His death brings to a tragically early end the life of a man who, in a few years, had won friendship and sincere respect to a degree that gave indication of the still higher place he would have attained in Baltimore's affection in years to come."

Mr. Dewart was born in Ohio fifty-two years ago, but spent much of his early life in Minnesota. He was graduated from the University of Minesota with the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1897, and later went to the General Theological Seminary for a year and then to the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, where he received his B. D. in 1901. He was ordained to the Diaconate in 1910 and priested in 1902 by Bishop Lawrence. Before coming to Baltimore in 1922 he served as Rector of St. aJmes Church, Roxbury, Mass., and of the Church of the Epiphany, Winchester, Mass. (1912-22).

During the Mexican trouble in 1916 Mr. Dewart went to the border as Chaplain in an artillery regiment of the National Guard of Massachusetts. Soon after he became Chaplain in the Twenty-sixth Division and went to France on the entry of America in the World War. He was at the front with the troops almost continuously for a year and later held a position on the staff of the Training School for Chaplains. He is survived by a widow and three sons, Donald, Kenneth and Murray Dewart, Jr.

Golden Jubilee.

Christ Church, Springfield, the Rev. Jerry Wallace, rector, celebrated its Golden Jubilee on November 16. The celebration took the form of a parish dinner, at which the principal speakers were the Rev. Charles F. Blaisdell, D. D., rector of Calvary Church, Memphis, and Mr. George K. Gibson, Superintendent of St. Luke's Church School, Evanston, and one of the leading laymen of the Diocese of Chicago.

Mr. Pascal E. Hatch, rector's warden and treasurer of the parish, was the chairman of the meeting and spoke briefly on the life and work of the parish during the past years, as did also Mr. D. J. Lochman, parish warden. Mr. Clifford Hathaway, the clerk of the vestry, read the names of former people connected with the early days of the parish.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Clarence Wyatt Bispham has resigned as rector of the Church of the Advent, Indianapolis, Ind., because of ill health. His new address is care of Central Union Trust Company, 80 Broadway, New York City.

The address of the Rev. Herbert C. Merrill, minister in charge of deaf mute work in the Dioceses of Albany, Central New York and Western New York, formerly 615 West Brighton Avenue, Syracuse, N. Y., is now 814½ South Avenue.

The Rev. Francis C. Woodward has resigned as rector of Grace Church, Scottsville, N. Y. His new address is 51 Bellevue Drive, Rochester, N. Y.

The Rev. George C. Wadsworth has resigned as rector of Christ Church, Oil City, Pa.

Ordinations.

In the chapel of the Church House, Philadelphia, on November 5, the Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Garland, D. D., ordained John Raymond Crosby, Ph. D., S. T. D., D. C. L., deacon. The candidate was presented by the Rev. Jules L. Prevost, of Langhorne, and Bishop Garland preached the sermon. Dr. Crosby is to be in charge of Grace Church, Hulmeville.

Rev. Harry Stansbury Weyrich was advanced to the priesthood on Sunday, December 4, at Emmanuel Church, Baltimore, by the Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray. The candidate was presented by his rector, the Rev. Hugh Birckhead, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Wyatt Brown, D. D., rector of St. Michael's and All Angels' Church.

In St. Paul's Cathedral, Fond du Lac, on November 9, the Rt. Rev. Reginald H. Weller, D. D., advanced the Rev. Walter George Kings and the Rev. William Charles Downer to the priesthood. Both candidates were presented by the Rev. Frederick G. Deis, of St. Mark's Church, Oconto. Mr. Kings is to be minister in charge of St. Margaret's Church, Park Falls, and St. Clement's Church, Mellen, with residence at Park Falls, and Mr. Downer is to be minister in charge of St. Ignatius' Church, Eagle River.

The ordination of three Chinese deacons to the priesthood, which took place on October 1 in Hankow, did not bring together so large a congregation as that which gathered on Whitsunday, for it was a week day; but that very fact made it more possible for the clergy to be present and strengthen by their prayers their brethren who then stepped forward into the ranks of those who, as Bishop Gilman emphasized in his sermon, thus became acknowledged leaders of the Christian forces of Central China; a responsibility which would be crushing were it not for the "Power" which is promised along with the burden.

The three men represented, it was noticed, three of the many objects to which Christian work is directed in this new day. Rev. Nelson Lieo is one of the chaplains to the Church General Hospital, Rev. Fred Lieo is one of the clergy in charge of St. Andrew's, with its great mill population, while Rev. Wang K'ang-sen, son of a farmer, has just been appointed to the large farming district of Yuinmeng after a long apprenticeship in Simakeo, another farming district on the Han River.

WILL SERVE YOU

"A T ONCE"

is almost the universal plea in the hundreds of letters received each year by the Children's Home Society of Virginia.

" TO COME and RECEIVE" these poor little children.

"MOTHER is DEAD," or
"FATHER is DEAD," or
"BOTH FATHER and MOTHER are DEAD."

Just a sample of the letters received almost daily.

"Dear Sirs:

Please come and get four children at once, from three to twelve years of age: Henry 12, Joseph 6, Laura 4, and Annie Virginia 3. Grandmother over seventy years old and unable to take care of them longer. Father and Mother both killed in automobile accident.

Sincerely yours,

(Signed) CHAS. H. M., P. Virginia."

In the name of Heaven and of our Good Lord and Master, please send the biggest contribution you can make to the address below to help SAVE these hundreds of homeless, motherless, priceless and precious little Virginia children, for if we of Virginia do not SAVE our own Virginia children, then they will not be SAVED. The door of the Children's Home Society of Virginia is practically the only open door.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Fall on your knees and grow there. —Phelps.

"It is experience that makes commonplaces shine like stars."

God's law for our souls is as unvarying as the sun.

"Be mild and cleave to gentle things.
Thy glory and thy happiness be there."

Doubts are dreary things in times of sorrow. Ifs, buts, and perhapses are sure murderers of peace and comfort. Surely if those ages before the advent of Christ could say "I know", we should not speak less positively.—C. H. Spurgeon.

It is the failure to spend a definite even though it be a short time each day with God that is the secret of all weakness, variableness and shallowness in our spiritual experience and service.—W. H. Griffith-Thomas.

He chose this way, it may have been
That those poor mothers everywhere
Whose babies in the world's great inn
Find scanty cradle-room and fare,
As did the Babe of Bethlehem,
May find somewhat to comfort them.
—May Riley Smith.

The charm of Christianity lies in its concreteness; not merely is God seen embodied in man, but He comes to us, not as one of the more abstract and speculative classes aloof from man, but Emmanuel, God with us. It is to the crib and the Babe men look, to the Boy in the temple, to the strange Preacher of goodness, the Friend of Lazarus, the Sufferer of Gethsemane, the Confronter of Pilate and Herod, and above all, to the "Strange Man on a Cross".—Figges.

My teacher taught me that the way for me to help others was not to tell them their duty, but myself to learn of Him who bore our griefs and carried our sorrows. As I learned of Him, I should be able to help them. I have not had an theory but just to be their friend—to do for them the best I can. —George McDonald.

Sermon for Christmas Day

"For behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people; for unto you is born, this day, in the city of David, a Saviour, which is Christ, the Lord."—Luke 11:10.

BEHOLD, in effect, the grand tidings which, for four thousand years, the world had expected; behold the grand event which so many prophets had foretold; so many ceremonies had figured; so many righteous had awaited, and which all nature seemed to promise, and to hasten by the universal corruption spread through all flesh; behold the grand blessing which God's goodness prepared for men, after the infidelity of their first parent had rendered them all subject to sin and death.

The Saviour, the Christ, the Lord, at last appears this day on the earth. The over-shadowed brings forth the righteous; the star of Jacob appears to the universe; the scepter is departed from Judah, and He, who was to come, is arrived; the age of darkness is accomplished; the promised sign of the Lord to Judea hath appeared; a virgin has conceived and brought forth, and out of Bethlehem comes the leader who is to govern and enlighten all Israel.

What new blessings, my brethren, doth this birth not announce to men? It would not during so many ages, have been announced, awaited, desired; it would not have formed the religion of a whole people, the object of all the prophecies; the unravelling of all the figures, the sole end of all the proceedings of God towards men, had it not been the grandest mark of His love which He could give them. What a blessed night is that which presides at this divine bringing-forth! It hath seen the light of the world shine forth in its darkness; the heavens resound with joy and songs of thanksgiving.

BUT, my brethren, we must participate in the blessings which this birth is meant to bring us, in order to enter into all the transports of delight which it spreads through the heavens and the earth. The common joy is founded only on the common salvation which is offered to us; and if, in spite of this aid we still obstinately persist in perishing, the Church weeps over us, and we mingle mourning and sorrow with that joy with which such blessed tidings inspire it.

Now, what are the inestimable blessings which this birth brings to men? The heavenly spirits come themselves to make it known to the shepherds; it comes to render Glory to God, and peace to men; and behold the whole foundation of this grand mystery laid open. To God, that glory of which men had wished to deprive Him; to men, that peace of which they had never ceased their struggles to deprive themselves.

PART I.

MAN had been placed upon the earth for the sole purpose of rendering, to the author of his being, that glory and that homage which were his due. All called him to these duties; and everything, which ought to have called, removed him from them. To his supreme Majesty he owed his adoration and his homage; to his paternal goodness his love; to his infinite wisdom, the sacrifice of his reason and his lights. These duties, engraven on his heart, and born with him, were still also incessantly proclaimed to him by all creatures; he could neither listen to himself, nor to all things around him, without finding them; nevertheless, he forgets, he effaces them from his heart. He no longer saw in the work, that honor and that worship which were due to the sovereign Architect; in the blessings with which He loaded him, that love which he owed to His benefactor; in the obscurity spread through even natural causes, that impossibility, much less, of fathoming the secrecies of God, and that mistrust, in which he ought to live, of his own lights. Idolatry, therefore, rendered to the creature that worship which the Creator had reserved for Himself alone: the synagogue honored him from the lips, and that love, which it owed to Him, was confined to external homages totally unworthy of him; philosophy lost itself in its own ideas, measured the lights of God by those of men, and vainly believed that reason, which knew not itself, was able to know all truth; these sores spread over the face of the whole earth. In a word, God was no longer either known or glorified, and man was no longer known to himself.

The world was plunged, almost from its creation, in the horror of darkness; every age added to it fresh impieties. In proportion as the appointed time of the deliverer drew near, the depravity of men seemed to increase. Rome itslf, mistress of the universe, gave way to all the different worships of the nations she had subjugated; and beheld exalted, within her walls, the different idols of so many conquered countries, that they became the public monuments of her folly and blindness, rather than of her victories.

But, after all, though all flesh had corrupted his way, God no longer wished to pour out His wrath upon men, nor to exterminate them by a fresh deluge; He wished to save them. He had placed in the heavens the sign of His covenant with the world; and that sign was not the shining, though vulgar rainbow which appears in the clouds; it was Jesus Christ, His only Son, the word made flesh, the true seal of the eternal covenant, and the sole light which comes to enlighten the whole world.

He appears on the earth and restores to His Father that glory of which the impiety of a public worship had wished to deprive Him. The homage rendered to Him, by His holy soul united to the world, at once makes amends to His Supreme Majesty for all the honors which the universe had hitherto denied Him, in order to prostitute them to a creature. A Man-God adorer renders more glory to the divinity than all idolatrous ages and nations had deprived Him of; and such homage must indeed have been agreeable to the Sovereign God, seeing it alone effaced idolatry from the earth; made the blood of impure victims cease to flow; overturned the profane altars; silenced the oracles of demons; reduced to dust the vain idols, and changed their superb temples, till then the receptacle of every abomination, into houses of adoration and prayer. Thus was the universe changed; the only God, unknown even in Athens, and in those cities most celebrated for knowledge and polished manners, was worshipped; the world acknowledged its Author: God entered into His rights, a worship worthy of Him was established over the whole earth; and He had everywhere adorers, who worshipped Him in spirit and in truth.

Behold the first blessing accruing from the birth of Jesus Christ, and the first glory which He renders to His Father. But, my brethren, is this grand blessing for us? We no longer worship vain idols; an incestuous Jupiter, a lascivious Venus, a cruel and revengeful Mars; but is God, therefore, more glorified among us? In their place do we not substitute fortune, voluptuousness, court favor, the world, with all its pleasures? For, whatever we love more than God, that we worship; whatever we prefer to God, that becomes our God; whatever becomes the sole object of our thoughts, of our desires, of our affections, of our fears and hopes, becomes likewise the object of our worship; and our gods are our passions, to which we sacrifice the true God.

THUS Jesus Christ doth not confine Himself to manifesting the name of His Father to men, and to establishing, on the ruins of idols, the knowledge of the true God. He raiseth up worshippers, who reckon external homages as nothing, unless animated and sanctified by love; and who shall consider mercy, justice, and holiness, as the offerings most worthy of God, and the most shining attendants of their worship; second blessing from the birth of Jesus Christ, and second sort of glory which He renders to His Father.

Jesus Christ comes to open the eyes of Judea on an error so gross, so ancient, and so injurious to His Father. He comes to inform them, that man may be satisfied with externals alone, but that God regards only the heart; that every outward homage which withholds it from Him, is an insult and an hypocrisy, rather than a true worship; that it matters little to purify the external, if the internal be full of infection and putrefaction; and that God is truly worshipped only by loving Him.

Jesus Christ comes to restore to His Father that glory of which the vain reasonings of philosophy had deprived Him. He comes to teach to men that faith is the source of true lights; and that the sacrifices of reason is the first step of Christian philosophy. He comes to fix uncertainty, by instructing us in what we ought to know of the Supreme Being, and what, with regard to Him, we ought not to know.

In was in effect, sufficient that men, in order to render glory to God, should make a sacrifice to Him of their life, as to the author of their being, and should, by that avowal, acknowledge the impiety of idolatry; that they should make a sacrifice to Him of their love and of their heart, as to their sovereign felicity, and thereby proclaim the insufficiency and the inutility of the external and pharisaical worship of the synagogue; it was likewise required, that to him they should sacrifice their reason, as to their wisdom and to their eternal truth, and thus be undeceived with regard to the vain researches and the conceited knowledge of philosophers.

NOW, the sole birth of a Man-God, the ineffable union of our nature with a divine person, disconcerts all human reason; and this incomprehensible mystery, held out to men as their whole knowledge, their whole truth, their whole philosophy, their whole religion, at once makes them feel, that the truth, which they hitherto had in vain sought, must be sought, not by vain efforts, but by the sacrifice of reason and of our feeble lights.

BUT, alas! where among us are believers, who make a thorough sacrifice of their reason to faith; and who, rejecting their own lights, humble their eyes, in a respectful and silent adoration, before the majestic impenetrability of religion? I speak not of those impious, still to be found among us, who deny a God. Ah! we must leave them to the horror and the indignation of the whole universe which knows a divinity, and which worships Him; or rather leave them to the horror of their own conscience, which inwardly invokes and calls upon Him in spite of themselves; while outwardly they are glorifying themselves in professing not to know Him.

I speak of the majority of believers, who have an idea of the divinity, almost equally false and equally human, as had formerly the pagan philosophers; who consider Him as nothing in all the accidents of life; who live as if chance or the caprice of men determined all things here below; and who acknowledge good-luck and bad-luck as the two sole divinities which govern the world, and which preside over everything relative to the earth. I speak of those men of little faith who, far from adoring, the secrecies of futurity in the profound and impenetrable councils of providence, go to search for them in ridiculous and childish prophecies; attribute to man a knowledge which God hath solely reserved to Himself; with a senseless belief await, from the dreams of a false prophet, events and revolutions which are to decide the destiny of nations and empires; found thereupon vain hopes for themselves and renew either the folly of pagan augurs and soothsayers, or the impiety of the pythoness of Saul, and of the oracles of Delphi and Dodona. I speak of those who wish to penetrate into the eternal ways of God on our lots; and who, being unable, by the sole powers of reason, to solve the insurmountable difficulties of the mysteries of grace with regard to the salvation of men, far from crying out with the apostle, "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God"! are tempted to believe, either that God doth not interfere in our salvation; or, if He does, that it is needless for us to interfere in it ourselves. I speak of those dissolute characters in the world, who always find plausible and convincing, though, in fact, weak and foolish in the extreme, whatever unbelief opposes to faith, who are staggered by the first frivolous doubt proposed by the impious; who appear as if they would be delighted that religion were false; and who are less touched by that respectable load of proofs which overpower a conceited reason and its truth, than with a senseless discourse which opposes it, in which there is generally nothing important but the boldness of the impiety and of the blasphemy. Lastly, I speak of many believers who turn over to the people the belief of so many wonderful actions which the history of religion has preserved to us; who seem to believe that, whatever is above the power of man, is likewise beyond the power of God; and who refuse credit to the miracles of a religion which is solely founded on them, and which is itself the greatest of all miracles.

Behold how we still snatched from God that glory which the birth of Jesus Christ had rendered to Him. It had taught us to sacrifice our own lights to the incomprehensible mystery of His manifestation in our flesh, and no longer to live but by faith; it had fixed the uncertainties of the human mind, and recalled it from the errors and the abyss in which reason had plunged it, to the way of truth and life, and we abandon it: and even under the empire of faith, we wish still to walk as formerly, under the standards, if I may venture to speak in this manner, of a weak reason: the mysteries of religion, which we cannot comprehend, shock us; we suspect, we reform all; we would have God to think like man. Without altogether losing our faith, we suffer it to be inwardly weakened; we allow it to remain inactive; and it is this relaxation of faith which has corrupted our manners; multiplied vices; inflamed all hearts with a love of things present; extinguished the love of riches to come; placed trouble, hatred and dissention among believers, and effaced those original marks of innocence, of sanctity and of charity, which at first had rendered Christianity so respectable even to those who refused submission to it. But not only doth the birth of Jesus Christ restore to God that glory of which men had wished to deprive Him; it likewise restores to men that peace, of which they had never ceased to deprive themselves: "And on earth peace, good will towards men."

PART II.

AN universal peace reigned throughout the universe when Jesus Christ, the "Prince of Peace", appeared on earth; all the nations subject to the Roman empire peaceably supported the yoke of those haughty masters of the world; Rome herself, after civil dissentions, which had almost depopulated her walls, filled the islands and deserts with her proscribed, and bathed Europe and Asia with the blood of her citizens, breathed from the horror of these troubles, and reunited under the authority of a Caesar, experienced in slavery a peace, which she had never, during the enjoyment of her liberty, been able to accomplish.

The universe was then at rest; but that was but a deceitful calm. Man, the prey of his own violent and iniquitous passions, experienced within himself the most cruel dissention and war; far from God, delivered up to the agitations and frenzies of His own heart; combatted by the multiplicity and the eternal contrariety of his irregular propensities, he was unable to find peace, because he never sought it but in the source of all his troubles and disquiets. Philosophers made a boast of being able to bestow it on their followers; but that universal calm of the passions which they gave hopes of to their sage, and which they so emphatically announced, might suppress their sallies; but it left the whole venom in their heart. It was a peace of pride and ostentation; it masked the outward man; but under the mask of ceremony, man always knew himself to be the same.

JESUS Christ comes today upon the earth, to bring that true peace to men which the world hitherto had never been able to give them. He comes radically to cure the evil; His divine philosophy is not confined to the promulgation of pompous precepts, which might be agreeable to reason, but which cured not the wounds of the heart; and, as pride, voluptuousness, hatred and revenge, had been the fatal sources of all the agitations experienced by the heart of man, he comes to restore peace to him, by draining them off, through His grace, His doctrine, and His example.

Yes, my brethren, I say that pride had been the original source of all the troubles, which tore the heart of men. What wars, what frenzies, had that fatal passion not lighted upon the earth? With what torrents of blood had it not inundated the universe? And what is the history of nations and of empires, of princes and of conquerors, of every age and people, but the history of those calamities with which pride from the beginning had afflicted men? The world was but a gloomy theatre, upon which that haughty and senseless passion every day exhibited the most bloody scenes. But the external operations were but a faint image of the trouble which the proud man inwardly experienced. Ambition was a virtue; moderation was looked upon as meanness; an individual overthrew his country, overturned the laws and customs, rendered millions miserable, in order to usurp the first place among his fellow-citizens; and the success of his guilt ensured him every homage; and his name stained with the blood of his brethren, acquired only additional lustre in the public annals which preserved its memory; and a prosperous villain became the grandest character of his age. That passion, descending among the crowd, became less striking; but it was neither less animated nor furious; the obscure was not more at his ease than the public man; each wished to carry off the prize from his equals; the orator, the philosopher, wrangled for, and tore from each other that glory, which, in fact, was the sole end of all their toils and watchings; and, as the desires of pride are insatiable, man, to whom it was then honorable totally to yield himself up to it, being unable to rest in any degree of elevation, was likewise incapable of peace and tranquillity. Pride become the sole source of human honor and glory, was likewise become the fatal rock of the quiet and happiness of men.

The birth of Jesus Christ, by correcting the world of their error, reestablishes on the earth that peace which pride had banished from it. He might have manifested Himself to men, with all the marks of splendor which the prophets attributed to Him; He might have assumed the pompous titles of conqueror of Judah, of legislator of the people, of deliverer of Israel; Jerusalem, in these glorious marks, would have recognized Him whom she awaited; but Jerusalem in these titles, saw only a human glory; and Jesus Christ comes to undeceive, and to teach her, that such glory is nothing; that such an expectation had been unworthy of the oracles of so many prophets who had announced Him; that the Holy Spirit, which inspired them, could hold out only holiness and eternal riches to men; that all other riches, far from rendering them happy, only increased their evils and crimes; and that His visible ministry was to correspond with the splendid promises, which had, for so many ages, announced Him, only by being wholly spiritual, and that He should intend only the salvation of men.

Thus, He is born at Bethlehem, in a poor and abject state; without external state or splendor, HE WHOSE BIRTH SONGS OF ALL THE ARMIES OF HEAVEN THEN CELEBRATED; without title which might distinguish Him in the eyes of men, He who was exalted above all principality and power; He suffers His name to be written down among those of the obscurest subjects of Caesar; He whose name was above all other names, and who alone had the right of writing down the names of His chosen in the book of eternity; vulgar and simple shepherds alone came to pay Him homage; He before whom whatever is mighty on earth, in heaven, and in hell, ought to bend the knee; lastly, whatever can confound human pride is assembled at the spectacle of His birth. If titles, rank, or prosperity had been able to render us happy here below, and to shed peace through our heart, Jesus Christ would have made His appearance clothed in them, and would have brought all these riches to His disciples; but He brings peace to us only by holding them in contempt, and by teaching us to hold them equally in contempt; He comes to render us happy, only by coming to suppress desires which hitherto had occasioned all our disquiets; He comes to point out to us more solid and more durable riches, alone capable of calming our hearts, of filling our desires, of easing our troubles; riches of which man cannot deprive us, and which require only to be loved and to be wished for, to be assured of possessing them.

NEVERTHELESS, who testifies of this blessed peace? Wars, troubles, frenzies, are they more rare since His birth? Are those empires and states which worship him, in consequence more peaceful? Does that pride which He came to destroy, occasion less commotion and confusion among men? Alas! see among Christians that peace which ought to be their inheritance, and where shall you find it? In cities? Pride sets everything there in motion; every one wishes to soar above the rank of his ancestors; an individual exalted by fortune destroys the happiness of thousands who walk in His steps, without being able to attain the same point of prosperity. In the circle of domestic walls? They conceal only distresses and cares; and the father of the family, solely occupied with the advancement rather than the Christian education of his offspring, leaves to them, for inheritance, his agitations and disquiets, which they, in their turn, shall one day transmit to their descendants.

BEHOLD, my brethren, to what height of honor Jesus Christ, in this mystery, exalts our flesh; He makes of it the temple of God; the sanctuary of the Holy Spirit; the portion of a body in which the fulness of the divinity resides; the object of the kindness and the love of His Father. But do we not still profane this holy temple? Do we not still turn to shame the members of Jesus Christ? Do we, in a higher degree, respect our flesh, since it is become a holy portion of His mystical body? Does that shameful passion not still exercise the same tyranny over Christians, that is to say, over the children of sanctity and liberty? Does it not still disturb the peace of the universe, the tranquility of empires, the harmony of families, the order of society, the confidence of marriage, the innocence of social intercourse, the lot of every individual? Are not the most tragical spectacles still every day furnished to the world by it? Does it respect the most sacred ties and the most respectable character? Does it not reckon as nothing every duty? Does it pay attention even to decency? And does it not turn all society into a frightful confusion, where custom has effaced every rule? Even you, who listen to me, from whence have arisen all the miseries and unhappinesses of your life, is it not from that deplorable passion? Is it not that which has overturned your fortune; which has cast trouble and dissention through the heart of your family; which has swallowed up the patrimony of your fathers; which has dishonored your name; which has ruined your health, and now makes you to drag on a gloomy and disgraceful life on the earth? Is it not, at least, that which actually rends your heart at present filled with it? What goes on within you but a tumultuous revolution of fears, desires, jealousies, mistrusts, disgusts, and frenzies? And since that passion has stained your soul, have you enjoyed a single moment of peace? Let Jesus Christ again be born within your heart; He alone can be your true peace; chase from it the impure spirits, and the mansion of your soul will be at rest, become once more a child of grace; innocence is the only source of tranquility.

LASTLY, the birth of Jesus Christ reconciles men to His Father; it reunites the Gentile and the Jew; it destroys all those hateful distinctions of Greek and Barbarian, of Roman and Scythian; it extinguishes all animosities and hatreds; of all nations it makes only one people; of all His disciples, only one heart and one soul; last kind of peace which it brings to men. Formerly they were united together, neither by worship, a common hope, nor by the new covenant, which, in an enemy, holds out to us a friend. They considered each other almost as creatures of a different species: the diversity of religion, of manners, of countries, of languages, of interests, had, it would appear, as if diversified in them the same nature: scarcely did they recognize each other by that figure of humanity, which was the only sign of connection still remaining to them. Like wild beasts, they mutually exterminated each other; they centered their glory in depopulating the lands of their fellow-creatures, and in carrying in triumph their bloody heads as the splendid memorials of their victories: it might have been said that they held their existence from different irreconcilable creators, always watchful to destroy each other, and who had placed them here below only to revenge their quarrel, and to terminate that diagreement by the general extinction of one of the two parties; ever disunited man, and nothing bound them together but interest and passions, which were themselves the sole source of their divisions and animosities.

BUT Jesus Christ is become our peace, our reconciliation, the cornerstone which binds and unites the whole fabric, the living head which unites all its members, and makes but one body of the whole. Everything knits us to Him; and whatever knits us to Him unites us to each other. It is the same spirit which animates us, the same hope which sustains us, the same bosom which brings us forth, the same fold which assembles us, and the same Shepherd who conducts us; we are cildren of the same Father, inheritors of the same promises, citizens of the same eternal city, and members of one same body.

Now, my brethren, have so many sacred ties been successful in binding us together? Christianity, which ought to be but the union of hearts, the tie to knit believers to each other, and Jesus Christ to believers; and which ought to represent upon earth an image of the peace of heaven; Christianity itself is no longer but a horrible theatre of troubles and dissentions; war and fury seem to have established an eternal abode among Christians; religion itself, which ought to unite, divides them. The unbeliever, the enemy of Jesus Christ, the children of the false prophet, who came to spread war and devastation through men, are in peace; and the children of peace, and disciples of Him, who, this day, comes to bring it to men, have their hands continually armed with fire and sword against each other! Kings rise up against kings; nations against nations; the seas which separate reunite them for their mutual destruction; a vile morsel of stone arms their fury and revenge; and whole nations go to perish and bury themselves under its walls, in contesting to whom shall belong its ruins; the earth is not sufficiently vast to contain them, and to fix them, each one in the bounds which nature herself seems to have pointed out for states and empires; each wishes to usurp from his neighbor; and a miserable field of battle, which is scarcely sufficient to serve as a burial place to those who have disputed it, becomes the prize of those rivers of blood with which it is ever stained. O divine Reconciliator of men! return then once more upon the earth, since the peace which Thou broughtest to it at Thy birth still leaves so many wars and so many calamities in the universe.

OH! my brethren, in vain then hath Jesus Christ descended upon the earth! He is come to bring peace to us; He hath left it to us as our inheritance; nothing hath He so strongly recommended to us as that of loving each other; yet fellowship and peace seems as if banished from among us, and hatred and animosity divide court, city and families; and those whom the offices, the interests of the state, decency itself, and blood ought, at least, to unite, tear, defame, would wish to destroy, and to exalt themselves on the ruins of each other; and religion which shows us our brethren even in our enemies, is no longer listened to; and that awful threatening, which gives us room to expect the same severity on the part of God which we shall have shown our brethren, no longer touches or affects us; and all these motives, so capable of softening the heart, still leave it filled with all the bitterness of hatred. We tranquilly live in this frightful state: the justice of our complaints with regard to our enemies, calms us on the injustice of our hatred and of our rooted aversion towards them; and if, on the approach of death, we apparently hold out to them the hand of reconciliation, it is not that we love them more, it is because the expiring heart hath no longer the force to sustain its hatred, that almost all our feelings are extinguished, or, at least, that we are no longer capable of feeling anything but our own weakness and our approaching dissolution. LET US THEN UNITE OURSELVES TO THE NEWLY-BORN JESUS CHRIST; LET US ENTER INTO THE SPIRIT OF THAT MYSTERY; WITH HIM LET US RENDER TO GOD THAT GLORY WHICH IS HIS DUE; IT IS THE ONLY MEANS OF RESTORING TO OURSELVES THAT PEACE, OF WHICH OUR PASSIONS HAVE HITHERTO DEPRIVED US.

The Centuries of Silence and the Incarnation of "The Word"

FOREWORD.

MALACHI, the last of the prophets, prophesied about 420 B. C. From that time until the Coming of Christ, no prophet's voice was heard in Israel. The period is known as "The Centuries of Silence". It witnessed the repeated conquest, massacre, enslavement and humiliation of the Jews. Conquered in turn by the Persians, Greeks, Egyptians, Syrians and Romans, Jerusalem was repeatedly taken, and the Temple violated. Under Antiochus Epiphanes, a Syrian, the Jews were forbidden to worship God, observe the Sabbath, practice circumcision, or conform in any respect to the Mosaic law; all copies of the Holy Scriptures were ordered destroyed, and a statue of Jupiter Olympus was placed on the Altar of Burnt Offering in the Temple. This brought on the successful Maccabeean Revolt. Finally Herod, an Idumaean, who outwardly conformed to Jewish ritual observances, became King of Judea, as the Roman representative. He rebuilt the Temple, but placed the Imperial Golden Eagles of Rome over its entrance; and he constructed numerous heathen temples elsewhere in the country.

During this period, the Rabbis and Scribes largely devoted their energies to an elaboration of the rites and ceremonies required of each individual in order to conform to the Mosaic law and to the oral traditions of the Elders, which were placed on an equality with the law by the sect of Pharisees. At the time of Christ's Coming, it is stated that there were several hundred specific rites and ceremonies to be performed each day by a devout Jew; and that it was currently believed that if one Jew could fulfill all these requirements for one day, the Messiah would come immediately.

"The Centuries of Silence" were broken by: The Annunciations—to Zacharias (Luke 1:5-22); to Joseph (Matt. 1:18-25); to the Virgin (Luke 1:26-38).

The Birth of Christ (Luke 2:1-20; Matt. 2:1-12).

The preaching of John the Baptist; the Baptism of Jesus; and John's testimony that He was the Son of God (Matt. 3; Mark 1:1-11; Luke 3:1-22; John 1:6-8; 15:19-37).

"THE CENTURIES OF SILENCE."

Four long centuries of silence, with no prophet's gifted voice
To declare to Israel's children—people of God's special choice—
When the looked-for "King Messiah";—the anointed superman;—
From the royal line of David, with a world-controlling plan,
Should evict the hated Roman, make supreme the Jewish law,
With a power and glory greater than the Queen of Sheba saw.

Four long centuries of silence, while the priesthood daily taught
That with form and ceremonial could God's favor best be bought:—
While the Rabbis, dwelling daily on the promises of old,
On the Messianic Coming, by the prophets all foretold,—
Urged that ever stricter living by the full Mosaic test
Would assure the promised glory to the people God had blessed.

Four long centuries of silence, and an Idumaean King
Holds Judaea with the power of an armed Roman ring:—
While the Temple of Jehovah on the Holy City's height
Has been sullied by the presence of a heathen idol's blight:—
While God's chosen people daily, at each hour of sacrifice,
Must now worship where the shadow of Imperial Eagles lies.

Four long centuries of silence, while the heart of Jewry bled
At the sight of shrines to Baal, throughout Canaan widely spread:
While, relying on His promise, the devout still prayed to God
For relief to suffering Israel from His fearful chastening rod; —
For the coming of Elijah to announce the promised reign
Of the King, whose visioned glory should restore her power again.

THE BREAKING OF THE SILENCE.
"The Annunciations."

That long silence now was broken;—in the Temple's inner shrine,
When "The Herald's" birth was promised, of a royal priestly line:—
In the Galileean country, where the Angel Gabriel's word
Told the Virgin of the glory that was promised by her Lord;—
Of the Spirit overshadowing, of the Son that should be given,

Who should be the Incarnation of the Son of God in Heaven.

THE COMING OF THE KING AND THE SIGN OF HIS COMING.

"The Incarnation."

Not with worldly pomp and splendor did the King come to His Own;—
For a stable served as birthplace, and a manger for His throne;
No loud peal of earthly trumpets marked this miracle of time;
But the humble Shepherds only heard the wondrous heavenly chime,
As the Angels sang the glory of the marvel of His birth,
And declared His Coming Kingdom would bring peace, goodwill to earth.

The Sign—"The Star of Bethlehem."

Not to Pharisee, self-righteous; nor to Sanhedrim, nor Priest;
Was the Heavenly signal granted; but to Wise Men from the East.—
To those Three, of saintly spirit, of devout and humble mind,
Looking daily for the coming of the Saviour of Mankind,
Was the wondrous vision granted of blest Bethlehem's bright star,
Marking where our Lord was cradled, with a glory from afar.

This:—the Christ-Child's crown of glory on that brilliant Christmas Morn,
When the Angels sang the wonder of humanity's new dawn;
When the kingdom of the spirit was announced on earth to men;
When the happiness of Eden was made possible again;
When the Nations saw the coming of the rule of heavenly love;
When the morning stars sang paeans to a gracious God above.

"The Herald."
His Message.

Through long years of preparation in the desert waste and wild;
Fed on honey and wild locusts; consecrated from a child:
John, "The Herald", trains his spirit; and his message then he cries,
With prophetic fervor stating; mine the mission to baptize
With the water of repentance; then my people, else now lost,
At the hands of God, the Saviour, may receive the Holy Ghost.

The Baptism of Jesus and the Descent of the Holy Spirit.

And, baptizing in the waters of historic Jordan's flood,
Comes to him our Lord and Saviour, for the end of mankind's good,—
There, submitting to Baptism (though for naught could He repent),
With the water, from the Heavens is the Holy Spirit sent;—
In a dove-like form, descending on His head it comes to rest,
With a voice from Heaven declaring Him the Son, beloved and blest.

"The Kingdom,"

Its Privileges and the Hope of the World.

Through two thousand years resounding, rings the Angels' heavenly song:—
That our mighty glorious leader, Lord of Heaven and Earth, is strong;
That the Son of God so loved us, that He came to Earth to give,
By His Holy Incarnation, a new hope that man might live:
That His Kingdom of the Spirit is as wide as Heaven's own dome;
That a welcome waits each mortal in His fair eternal home.

Through two thousand years resounding, vocal to each listening ear,
Comes Christ's message;—"love abounding, peace and charity and cheer"—
In each contrite heart indwelling, when with humble voice we pray,
Comes the Holy Ghost, conferring strength as needed for each day;
Bringing sweet, divine assurance of a Father's tender care,
Of a Brother's kindly feeling, of a Sonship over there.

The Universal Week of Prayer

Sunday, January 1, to Saturday, January 7, 1928

WE publish herewith the call to the Universal Week of Prayer, issued by the World's Evangelical Alliance. For eighty-one years this call has been made. It is to be hoped that groups of churches may unite to observe this week of prayer, but if this is not done, that groups of individuals may do so. The Sunday School Times well says: "With almost everything in this new call to the Universal Week of Prayer, God's true people can whole-heartedly unite; there are searching reasons given for humiliation and confession and deeply discerning and Scriptural statements of need for intercession."

To all who in every land call upon God through His Son, our Saviour, Jesus Christ.

Dear Brothers in Christ,

Today more than ever before is there forced upon the Church of Jesus Christ the necessity for a call to united prayer.

From a political as well as from an ecclesiastical point of view the need for peace and union has never been so universally manifest. The number of assemblies and conferences convened to bring closer together churches and individuals is multiplying unceasingly. But of what avail are all such efforts of human organization, sincere and distinterested as their motives may be, if God Himself is not in the center of their programs? And how can He be there if all those who call upon Him do not unite the best of their spiritual forces to insure His presence?

We believe with all our faith in the power of good will, and in the fecundity of love, but we know from the experience of all the Church's history that good will and love in themselves are nothing if it is not God the Holy Spirit who inspires and animates them.

Let us unite therefore to supplicate our heavenly Father to come Himself by an effusion of His Spirit to insure the success of our efforts. And let us ask Him above everything else that the ambition of the whole Church may be to put in the first place the seeking after widespread spiritual revival; apart from the deepening of the spiritual life of individuals and of Churches. Except for a revival of the moral and spiritual ideal among all peoples, all efforts at organization and drawing together will remain stirile

And in thus gathering for intercession let us bear in mind that we have not to overcome any reluctance upon God's part, but only to cooperate with His willingness and ability "to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think". How full of eternal result then may this week be if we not only seek and receive the fullness of the Holy Spirit, but also submit ourselves, spirit, soul, and body, to His government and guidance for whatever service He may appoint us in the furtherance of the Gospel of Christ.

May God Himself pour out His blessing on the Universal Week of Prayer in the year of grace 1928.

Sunday, January 1—Texts Suggested for Sermons and Addresses.

"Incline your ear, and come unto me; hear, and your soul shall live" (Isa. 55:3).

"Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me" (John 14:1).

"Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you" (John 15:14).

"We preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord" (2 Cor. 4:5).

Monday—Thanksgiving and Humiliation.

Thanksgiving—For the long suffering of God toward us.

For the privileges and blessings of the past year, even when passing through difficulties and trials.

Christian leaders are urged to make arrangements early to bring Christians together for united prayer daily during this week, and to circulate the program widely. Ministers are earnestly asked to use the suggested texts for sermons on the opening Sunday, and bring the Week of Prayer before their congregations. Copies of programs giving the topics for prayer, one page left blank for local announcements of the meetings, to be distributed in local churches on the Sunday preceding the week-day meetings, may be ordered at cost from the World's Evangelical Alliance, 19 Russell Square, London, W. C.1, England. The following are the British prices, to which postage should be added:

Program, with Prayer Topics, large size, 2 shillings 6 pence per 100;

Program, small size, 1 shilling 6 pence per 100.

Week of Prayer Posters, large, 2 shillings each;

Week of Prayer Posters, small, 1 shilling each.

The Alliance hopes that brief reports of the meetings held, and results, will be sent to the General Secretary at the address noted.

For the progress of the Kingdom of Jesus Christ in the world.

For the continued presence and work of the Holy Spirit.

For the new year that lies before us as an open door, and a fresh opportunity of proving the sincerity of our obedience and willingness for service.

Humiliation—For mistakes and faults committed in the course of the past year.

For opportunities that offered, but were not taken.

For our selfish interests, whether from an individual, family, or national point of view.

Prayer—For a vision of the Kingdom of God in its entirety.

For light to perceive and strength to fulfill the duties that this vision lays upon us.

Scripture readings—Psalm 27; Ezekiel 37:1-14; Daniel 9:3-10, 17-19; John 17:20-26; Ephesians 4:1-5.

Tuesday—The Universal Church.

"I believe in the holy catholic (universal) Church, the communion of saints" (The Apostles' Creed).

Thanksgiving—For the evident desire for closer union among the different sections of the universal Church.

For the still more distinct desire to seek not an outward, but an inward and spiritual unity.

For the sacrifices already agreed to by a great number of individuals and of Churches in view of this common desire.

Confession—Of oppositions to this unity which come from pride and egoism, even in God's children.

Of our temptation of wishing to see our own ideals triumph without considering those of others.

Let us confess our lack of true love.

Prayer—For a more sincere endeavor toward "the unity of the spirit, in the bond of peace".

That we may have an ever deeper humility in the consciousness of our own shortcomings.

To learn to understand more completely the point of view of others.

Scripture readings—Psalm 97; Psalm 90; John 14; 1 Cor. 13; Colossians 3:1-17; Philippians 2:1-18.

Wednesday—Nations and Governments.

Thanksgiving—For all approaches to and achievements in international friendship.

For the progressive disappearance of causes of friction.

For the interest manifest all over the world in the work of the League of Nations.

Confession—That in spite of all progress, the masses in all the nations, by their skepticism and their inertia, are retarding international friendship. Of national egoism, of mutual suspicions, and of that lack of broad vision, which form obstacles to world peace.

Prayer—Let us pray for those whose mission it is to guide others, that God may give them first of all a clear perception of the righteousness which exalteth a nation.

That He may afterward give them the courage to go forward in spite of opposition.

That He may enable them ever to keep before their eyes the moral ideal before political prejudices and diplomatic anxieties.

That the Christians of every nation may support their governments by an ever more intense effort in intercession.

Scripture readings—Deuteronomy 30; Joshua 24:14-28; Psalm 23; Isaiah 41:1-16; 2 Corinthians 4.

Thursday—Missions.

Thanksgiving—For the growth of the missionary work of the Church.

For new translations of the Scriptures which have enabled the Gospel to reach tribes until now ignorant of its message.

For new attempts at cooperation which have been made possible in several mission fields.

Confession—That the work of missions still remains the work of the little flock.

That the Church of Jesus Christ as a whole has not yet taken seriously the duty of the evangelization of the world. Of any abatement of missionary enthusiasm, among young people, or a diminishing of the number of missionary societies to engage in secular work to the neglect of spiritual work and the preaching of the Gospel.

Prayer—For all pastors and evangelists of the native churches.

For ever more fraternal relations between the missionaries and their native co-workers, that the love of the former may be free from all pride and from any patronizing spirit.

For all Bible Societies, and the diffusion of the Word of God which remains the essential element of the missionary message.

For the meeting at Jerusalem of the International Missionary Council (April).

Scripture readings—Isaiah 49:1-13; Isaiah 4; Matthew 28; Acts 1:1-12; Romans 10.

Friday—Families, Schools, and Universities.

Thanksgiving—For the faithfulness of God in the continuance of His blessing from one generation to another.

For the Christian families who in the midst of growing temptations continue to give promise of the formation of fresh strength for the Church of tomorrow.

For the development of spiritual work among the young, and all efforts to follow up the work of Sunday Schools by keeping them in touch with the Churches.

For the development of a spiritual movement in a great number of colleges and universities.

Prayer—For all parents, that God may give them clearer consciousness of the influence they can exert, and a more complete faithfulness in their efforts to set a right example.

For all officials of Sunday Schools, Christian Associations of Young Men and Women, of Student Christian Movements, Boy Scouts, Girl Guides, etc., that they may ever give first place to the things that accompany salvation.

Scripture readings—1 Samuel 1:21-28; Hebrews 12: 14-28; 2 Timothy 1 and 2; 1 John 2:1-17.

Saturday—Home Missions, and the Jews.

Confession—Of our tendency to neglect home duties in seeking those that lie farther afield.

Of our temptation to leave to others the accomplishment of the tasks that do not appeal to our imagination, and to let ourselves be carried away into new paths.

Of our skepticism with regard to some parts of the home mission field; particularly of the possibility of spiritual revival, and the return of the Jews to the God of Jesus Christ.

Prayer—For hearts large enough to realize the needs of all parts of the mission field, those close at hand as well as far distant.

That God may lead us to take seriously the affirmations of His Word and the will of our Lord Jesus Christ: "Ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judaea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."

That He may give us sufficient faith and love to like the most difficult tasks and to give ourselves wholly to them.

The Holy Spirit and the Incarnation

By Kenneth Mackenzie

BY the Incarnation we imply that hallowed process by which the Eternal Son of God became, by His own choice, the Son of Man, that He might share with humanity the common experiences of mankind in a world fraught with suffering; to reveal His Father as He knew Him; to make a disposition of sin by His meritorious death. To simple faith there are unmistakable evidences of His being the former; His own teachings disclose Him as the latter.

This is not readily believed by many, though for generations it has claimed the acceptance of millions of professing Christians. The psychological atmosphere of the age has clouded the sky of faith; and thinking men are asking why they should be required to believe what is so contrary to the standards by which they appraise that pure life, that winsome character, that willing sacrifice. Is it not enough that His untiring service, exalted ethics and uncomplaining surrender to death should inspire grateful hearts with a worship worthy of Him? We allow all this; but hold for an added incentive to devotion, the recognition of His supernatural birth.

We must accept the challenge that this doctrine is based upon fact or fiction. It cannot be a mingling of both. To maintain that the writers of the New Testament did not record history, but rather that they framed a record consistent with the majesty of the sovereign character they would portray, does not meet the exigency. Nor yet, that we may hold the symbolism and deny the reality. Such expedients are wide of the mark to the true believer. He cannot adopt the principle of reciting the venerable creeds of the Church with mental reservations. The believer must confess that the history which He Himself is described as having experienced ere the coming to earth, must be a vital truth, not an invention; and if truth, the recorded manner of His birth is but consistent with what He was in His pre-incarnation life.

Our part is not to argue; but to discern if we can the relation of the Holy Spirit to this profound mystery. If we are in any measure persuaded of the inspiration of the Word of God by the Holy Spirit, as the writers claim, there lies in the concession the allowance that the Holy Spirit has a vision of the Incarnation in sundry passages predictive of the coming of the Lord Jesus.

It was the seed of the woman who should bruise the head of the serpent (Gen. 3:15). By common consent, the serpent is the administrator of the power of darkness (Rom. 16:20; Rev. 12:9; 20:1, 2). It would seem that a purposeful omission is here made; that the woman was in the transgression (1 Tim. 2:14) should be the means of the coming of the Redeemer without the agency of the man. This may not be dogmatically asserted; it is at least suggestive. Turning to the much-disputed passage in Isa. 7:14, we may be well persuaded that the Holy Spirit meant an unmarried woman when the word "almah" was employed. The translators of the Hebrew into the Septuagint about 280 B. C., used the accepted word for virgin, "parthenos", as St. Matthew records in Matt. 1:20-25. There is a beautiful blending of the divine with the human in Isa. 9:6, "Unto us a child is born (the human), unto us a Son is given (the divine)". Did not the Holy Spirit move Micah to write of Him that His goings forth have been of old, from everlasting? Then by all that is consistent with such a postulate, His advent should be commensurate with such declaration (Micah 5:2).

The writers of the New Testament have no perplexity. The Incarnation is as simple and admitted as any other fact in the matchless life. It is so naively believed, that save for St. Luke's explicit testimony, it was taken for granted (Luke 1:35). The majestic opening of St. John's Gospel needs no commentary. Such an ascription carries with it the presumption of the very doctrine we are treating (John 1:1-9). There is room for the suggestion that the pronoun "who" in verse 13 may have been in the singular originally and that its verb corresponded. The context would allow a possible construction, so that we might read, "as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name; who was born, not of blood (bloods in the Greek, signifying the singularity of the flesh generation), nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God; and the Word was made flesh and dwelt (tabernacles) among us, and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only Begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth" (John 1:12-14).

When the contention is made that there is an utter absence of reference to the Virgin Birth by St. Paul, we urge that attention be paid to Phil. 2:5-11. If our Lord thought it not a thing to be grasped at to be equal with God, and emptied Himself that He might take upon Him the form of a servant and be made in the likeness of men, surely such a procedure should be accompanied by a method consistent with the positive supernatural intent implied. If we look to St. Luke for the particulars of the Incarnation (Luke 1:35), let us not fail to note that his close relation to St. Paul must have embraced a mutual acceptance of this truth.

Should we be confronted with the claim that the absence of a direct assertion on the part of our Lord Himself as to the manner of His coming into the world is proof of its unreliability, let us be clear in our answer that the Incarnation as understood by us, if admitted by Him would have supplied His enemies with the most successful weapon by which to condemn Him. Consequently, we may readily see that it became a doctrine, only after His mother had passed on; when there would be no ground for involving her in a misunderstood relation. We may reverently acknowledge that the Holy Spirit would thus guard her and Him. But what is meant by His challenge to the inquisitorial Jews if not this very thing, when He demanded as to Ps. 110:1, "If David in spirit called him Lord, how is he his son"? Matt. 22:41-46)? Certainly, generation is here implied, though they would be too blind to see it. Would it be too hard to believe that veiled behind this appeal, lay His recognition of His supernatural entry into the world?

As we study His marvelous life, we see how closely to the mind of the Holy Spirit He held Himself. Every act, deed, word and thought was submitted to the behest of the Third Person of the Holy Trinity, by whom He came into the world; by whom He was inspired and energized. He could, and would do nothing of Himself (John 5:19, 30). It was in the power of the Spirit that He wrought His wonderful works (Acts 10:38). God gave not the Spirit by measure unto Him (John 3:34). And the Spirit by which He had been held and quickened in His earth-life, He confers upon His own for their following Him in the way they should go (Rom. 8:14). As He was born of the Spirit in natural generation, His mother being the human channel, so all saints are re-born children of the heavenly family (John 3:3, 5; Titus 3:5, 6), by the same Spirit.

There remains yet one feature of the theme. Thinking men, conceding the Scriptural declaration of His sinless life (John 8:46; 2 Cor. 5:21; Heb. 4:15; 7:26; 1 Peter 2:22), are in difficulty as to how He could escape the infection of sin through His mother. The Romanists guard Mary by attributing to Anne, her mother, a sinless condition. But this is not essential to the solution of the question. Undoubtedly, when the Holy Spirit came upon Mary the Virgin, as predicted by the Angel Gabriel (Luke 1:35), that "overshadowing" must have purged her of all sin, from the time of her conception until she saw the face of her Child in Bethlehem's manger. This is reasonable and appealing.

All saints who have found the reception and indwelling of the Holy Spirit to be the normal experience of the Christian life, have rested in the Biblical concept of the Virgin Birth. Following the delivery of a Christmas sermon, in which the preacher urged the acceptance of the doctrine of the Incarnation as essential to a right comprehension of the Lord Jesus, one of the men of his congregation, a clear thinker and cultured, went to the rector's study in a state of mind. His protest was, "I do not like your sermon. It antagonizes me. I cannot bring myself to accept this teaching. My regard for my Lord is as reverent as that of any man; but I cannot think of Him as being a particle different from the rest of humanity. To receive this idea would take Him out of my life, would prove a perpetual source of confusion. Besides, your presentation of the matter offends my sense of delicacy. To follow you would be to put a blight upon Him and His mother". His rector quietly listened to the impassioned outburst and then gently advised, "You will not get anywhere in this matter by an argumentative pathway. Nor, so I think, can you get away from the problem. You are an honest man; you want grounds for your beliefs. You will not accept a half truth; nor will you take second-hand what others dictate to you. There is one thing you can do; and I am sure you will do it. Cease controverting the question and give yourself to prayer. Will you forget everything else and ask God to give you His Holy Spirit"? A ready and relieved assent to this proposition was accorded and he left to make his quest. After some days, he caught the vision; and charged with a newfound joy, he rushed to his rector, and grasping his both hands, exclaimed, "O my brother, God has revealed to my heart, what I tried and failed to see by my intellect. I believe that Jesus Christ is the incarnated Son of God".

PLAIN BIBLE STUDIES

Note: In this new series of studies effort will be made to set forth in brief form wondrous things that God would have us know as told in His own eternal words.

Lesson No. 14.
Topic—The Holy Spirit (I).
(Read carefully Romans 8:1-27.)

In the topic before us we are again reminded of our negligence as Christians in failing to search the Holy Scriptures for the wonderful things concerning the mighty third Person of the Blessed Trinity; Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. Rarely do we hear the subject discussed, yet the importance of discerning the personality and work of the Holy Spirit is manifold; in fact, the gift of the Spirit to believers, is that which distinguishes God's own plan of salvation from all other so-called religions of the world. In title, the Holy Spirit might well be called, The Divine Executive of the God-head, as we shall see from past acts and present functioning power.

1. In action at the creation.—Gen. 1:2; Psalm 104:30; Job 26:13.
2. The divine association.—Matt. 28:19; 2 Cor. 2:10.
3. To exalt Christ, the Spirit's chief work.—John 16: 13, 14.
4. Imparts life eternal.—John 3:8.
5. The Incarnation of our Lord.—Luke 1:35-37.
6. When sinners believe on Christ, they are born of the Spirit.—John 3:5, 6.
7. Mighty works through the Spirit's power.—Luke 4: 18; Acts 1:8.
8. Was sent as Comforter, and to preside over the Church when our Saviour departed.—John 16:7; Acts 1:8.
9. Dwells within the believer.—John 14:17.
10. The Church is being formed by Him.—1 Cor. 12:13; Eph. 2:22.
11. He caused the Scripture to be written.—2 Peter 1:21.
12. Enlightens and teaches.—John 14:26; Job 32:8.
13. Imparts skill.—Exodus 31:3-5.
14. Gives inward assurance.—Rom. 8:16.
19. Will guide in all truth.—John 16:3; Acts 16:7-9.
20. Bestows gifts.—1 Cor. 12:4-11.
21. Fruit of the Spirit.—Gal. 5:22-23.
22. Makes intercession for believers.—Rom. 8:26.
23. Believers are sealed by the Spirit.—Eph. 1:13.
24. Gives peace, joy, and hope.—Rom. 14:17; Rom. 15:13.
25. We cannot flee from Him.—Psalm 139:7.
26. He will not always strive with man.—Gen. 6:3; Ps. 103:9.
27. Restrains iniquity until the Church is completed.—2 Thess. 2:7.
28. Can be grieved and quenched.—Eph. 4:30.
29. Victory through the Spirit.—Rom. 8:13, 14.
30. Believers are to walk in the Spirit.—Gal. 5:16.
31. Believers are to be filled with the Spirit.—Eph. 5:18.

The unconverted have but one nature, i. e., the flesh or self-life. After we receive Christ, the Eternal One, and are thus born of the Spirit, we have two natures with each struggling for supremacy (Rom. 7:23). The measure of surrender to either nature marks our daily walk and warfare (Eph. 6:10-18). The highest reference and cautious walk is due this Holy Guest within.

That Christmas Star

By the Reverend Theodore L. Cuyler, D. D.

ONE of the most intensely interesting of my recollections of Palestine is the memory of my ride down from Bethlehem and across the fields that lie eastward towards the Jordan. I said to myself, "It must have been in some of these fields that the shepherds were keeping watch over their flocks on that most wondrous night in the history of our world. Up in the midnight sky hung the star that guided the wise men to the sacred spot. And up yonder hillside trooped the shepherds to find that miracle of all miracles, that Babe lying in the manger who was the incarnate Son of God"!

The Star of Redemption.

How differently has human history read since that memorable night when the Star of Redemption shone out upon a world that had lain in darkness and spiritual death! With that star came the descent of the promised Christ —"God manifest in the flesh"! With Jesus Christ came a new gospel of human brotherhood—a gospel whose keynote was love. With Jesus Christ came a new civilization founded on the golden rule. With Jesus Christ came the perfect model for human conduct; with Him came the atoning sacrifice for sin and deliverance from the powers of hell. With Him came the "resurrection and the life". and the redemption of a countless host of immortal souls, into an exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

The Star That Shines Afar.

When the Christ of Bethlehem had finished the transcendent work of redemption on the cross and became the ascending Christ of Bethany, the luster of that star began to be visible beyond the narrow limits of Palestine. Apostles, baptized with the Holy Spirit and with fire, went everywhere preaching the new gospel of salvation. The most extraordinary man of the age, with his great soul illuminated by this star, wrote to Greek philosophers and skeptics, "I am determined to know nothing among you but Jesus Christ, and Him crucified".

Every minister who has done the best soul-saving work during the past twelve months has done it by preaching the faithful saying that Christ came into the world to save them; he has led his hearers where the star was shining. Not only has he guided them by that star to the only place of pardon, but to the only model and motive for a pure, strong, useful and happy life. To teach sinful, tempted and wayward men and women to steer towards eternity by that infallible and unchangeable star—is not that the great purpose for which pulpits were built and God's ambassadors placed in them?

The Star of Resurrection Victory.

There are thousands of readers of this tract to whom the year now closing has been a year of suffering and sorrow-stricken homes. You have seen dark hours. In one house there is an empty crib, and in another house an empty chair at your Christmas table. No human consolation was even a farthing-candle to cheer your aching hearts. You wanted not guesswork or conjecture—but a light straight from heaven itself—a light that could illuminate the grave, and could bring a blissful eternity into view. And oh, what an uplift it was to you when the star of Bethlehem became the star of Bethany's comforted household and resurrection victory over the tomb!

Over the plot in "Greenwood", where the dust of my own precious children is slumbering, that Christmas star is shining. "I am the resurrection and the life";—"them that sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him";—"I do not leave you comfortless"—these are the sweet words which the Christmas angels are singing. Our faith, listening to these voices from heaven, answers back again:

My Jesus, as Thou wilt!
Though seen through many a tear,
Let not my star of hope
Grow dim or disappear;
Through sorrow, or through joy,
Conduct me as Thine own
And help me still to say
My Lord, Thy will be done!

The Star that Shines All the Year Round.

And now let me tell you that some of you make the sad mistake of crowding your Christmas into one day, or a single week. You ought to have the Christmas star beaming into your hearts and into your homes all the year round. You are generous in giving once a year; why lock up your bounties during the rest of the time? You try to make your children happy at Christmastime; can't you love them as well, and do as much to put sunshine into their young hearts through the other one and fifty weeks of next year? You remember the poor, and make their tables smoke with your bounty; but they cannot live on a Christmas turkey for twelve months. You let the star of Bethlehem gladden your heart and cheer your spirits on one day of the calendar. But you cannot live on that single glimpse of the blessed light and joy that Jesus sheds. The only healthy and happy Christian is the one who runs his or her Christianity through every day's experience and conduct.

An Unerring, Unsetting Star.

Some people keep their religion for Sundays; and on Monday they fold it up and put it away with their Sunday clothes. Some thaw their hearts and purses out on a Thanksgiving day or in Christmas week, and then freeze them up again. Periodical religion is a sham and a reproach A healthy vigorous, cheerful working and Christ-serving religion cannot be maintained on Sabbath and on festival days alone. Every day has got to be a "Lord's day". Every step in your life has got to be taken by the light of that unerring, unsetting star that rose over the hills of Bethlehem twenty centuries ago. You and I must walk in the constant light and constant love of our Blessed Jesus if we expect to reach heaven, or to help others there.

Yet doth the star of Bethlehem shed
A luster pure and sweet;
And still it leads, as once it led,
To the Messiah's feet.
O Father, may that holy star
Grow every year more bright,
And send its glorious beams afar
To fill the world with light.

Be still, my heart, these anxious cares
To thee are burdens, thorns and snares;
They cast dishonor on thy Lord,
And contradict His gracious word.

Brought safely by His hand thus far
How canst thou now give place to fear?
How canst thou want if He provide
Or lose thy way with such a guide?

When first before His mercy seat
Thou didst thy all to Him commit,
He gave thee warrant from that hour
To trust His wisdom, love and power.

Did ever trouble yet befall
And He refuse to hear thy call?
And hath He not His promise passed
That thou shalt overcome at last?

Though rough and thorny be the road,
It leads thee home apace to God;
Then count thy present trials small
For Heaven will make amends for all.

God from on high has heard thy prayer,
He will thy ruined state repair,
Nor shall thy watchful Monarch cease
To guide thee in eternal peace.

—Newton.

A CHRISTMAS VISION.

On Christmas eve 'mid all the joyous glee
That in my plenteousness surrounded me,
I happened by some chance to turn mine eye
Out through a window-wreath that hung nearby.
And as I glanced through it into the night
I seemed to see, lit by some holy light,
A childish face with wistful, smiling lips
That thrilled me to my very finger-tips.

Two eager hands stretched forth called, as in stress,
To me to carry help to helplessness,
And in the sad eyes of that child I saw
In all its loveliness the Christmas Law—
Not a command, no overlasting Must
Upon reluctance for its teaching thrust,
But just a pleading hint to him who runs
That all who suffer are God's Little ones!

And then the picture in the wreath was gone,
And in its place the Eastern Star-beams shone—
The same that nineteen centuries ago
Led on the Wise Men with their heavenly glow;
And e'en as they I wandered through the drifts
And into lowly places carried gifts
To cheer, and give release, and pay my due Unto my Lord through them that suffer rue.

Book Reviews

A CHILD'S BOOK OF HYMNS AND CAROLS: Compiled and Published by Margaret G. Weed.

A recent importation from Czechoslovakia should prove of interest to all who are concerned in religious education of children. It is "A Child's Book of Hymns and Carols", being the words and music of sixteen of the best known hymns and carols with eight colored illustrations.

The book was published in Prague by V. Neubert a Synorie, and the book covers and the first illustration are by the well known child's artist, Maria Fischen Kvechova Further interest, however, lies in the fact that the seven other illustrations are by a young American, Judith Wragg, of Columbus, Georgia, and also that the book was compiled by Margaret G. Weed of Jacksonville, Florida.

"The idea is not mine," said Miss Weed. "So many mothers asked me why there were no hymnals with pictures for children as all the other song books had pictures and they liked them so much better. Then I saw a hymnal which the late Mrs. James Bancroft had made for her little children, and it was from this that the book grew. I have had the book printed on tough paper with flexible backs so that the children can handle them easily. I did not want a book so beautiful that it must be 'kept nice' and only looked at carefully. I wanted a book which they could use constantly and love to sing from."

Through the courtesy of the general distributor, Raf. D. Szalatnay, liberal discounts can be given churches and church organizations, either for their own use or for resale. It is especially felt that in Sunday School, kindergartens and first grades, as well as personal Christmas gifts, these books will fill a long-felt need.

IN THE HILLS OF GALILEE: By Louis Tucker. The Bobbs-Merill Company, Indianapolis, Indiana.

This is a beautiful book of stories in the time of Christ for children and also for grown people. The author has brought back the life of the first century with real people and, dominating all, is the wonderful Person of Jesus. Incidents not usually chosen for children's stories are selected. For, example, a beautiful tale is told of Jairus' daughter meeting Jesus, and in the following story Simon, who was the son of the widow of Nain, meets her also and after awhile they are married and live a very happy and holy life. The incidents introduced, and the style of the author will hold the attention of any reader. Thirty stories are included in the book, which cover many miracles and incidents of our Lord's life.

It is a good book for young people, wholesome and instructive.

SEMMES.

THE ANGELS' CHRISTMAS.

Angels look down with sad surprise
And disappointment in their eyes,
That it should be so long
Since their glad song
Awoke the earth with heavenly harmonies,
To welcome Christ her King.
Nigh twenty centuries
Have fled on swiftly flying wing,
And still we love to sing:
"Glory to the new-born King";
And yet we let the years go by
And do not really strive and try
With all our minds and hearts to make Him King:
Then would the whole earth ring
With praise of Him the mighty Prince of Peace
Who would make wars to cease
And untold blessings bring within His train
If we would only let Him reign.

THE REGISTRATION OF CHURCH SCHOOLS IN CHINA.

Mr. Editor:

Many people throughout the Church deeply regret the inability of Bishop Tucker of Virginia to act on the Special Commission sent by the National Council to China this autumn. In view of his experiences in Japan, the following statement which he has written, and which he now allows me to send to the Church papers, is both interesting and timely.

S. Harrington Littell.

"In view of the problem of registering schools in China, it may be well to say something about a similar problem which confronted us in Japan in 1899. In that year the Japanese Government made very stringent regulations about the compulsory teaching of religion in licensed schools. Most of the missions felt that they were not able to register under the law, but they were allowed by the Japanese government to make a partial registration which allowed them to teach religion as a part of their curriculum, but withheld from them certain of the privileges of fully licensed schools.

"In our own mission, however, we had already adopted a system of voluntary religious teaching in the school proper. We, therefore, went to the Japanese authorities and explained our method of teaching. They were willing to allow us to continue. The arrangement was as follows:

"We were not allowed to make religion one of the regular subjects in the curriculum. We were allowed to conduct religious classes outside of the regular curriculum hours.

"We also were allowed to register only the school itself and to exclude the dormitory from the provisions of the law. This meant that we were allowed to teach religion in any way that we chose to our dormitory students; the Japanese law applying only to the hours between eight and two when the regular classes were being carried on.

"We were greatly helped by the fact that the Japanese Government had a permanent policy, which while it did not allow religion to be taught as a compulsory subject, yet it was not antagonistic to Christianity. The authorities recognized that our schools were established in order to promote our Christian work and they were willing that they should be so conducted so long as we did not violate the actual provisions of the law. They showed great consideration, and in some cases suggested means by which we could effect our Christian purposes and still keep strictly within the provisions of the law.

In my opinion the conditions prevailing in Japan are so different from those existing at the present time in China, that no inference can be drawn from the policy adopted in Japan that would apply to the question which now confronts the Church in China with regard to its educational system.

Church Intelligence

Revised Prayer Book Is Approved By Lords.

London, December 14.—The revised Prayer Book of the Church of England tonight received the stamp of approval of the House of Lords, by a vote of 241 to 88.

The action took the form of acceptance of the motion of the Archbishop of Canterbury, that the revised Prayer Book be submitted to his majesty for royal approval. It followed days of debate, in which was stressed the potential effect of adoption of the revision upon reunion of the Churches. Because of the unusually large number of voters, the division required twenty minutes.

In today's debate the Bishop of Durham expressed the opinion that rejection of the book, if concurred in by the Church of England, would work irreparable harm to reunion, whereas evangelization would lay the foundations for restoration of Church discipline.—Richmond Times Dispatch.

Address by Bishop Guerry.

Following an eloquent address by the Rt. Rev. William A. Guerry, Bishop of the Diocese of South Carolina, before the December meeting of the Ministerial Union on Monday in the Y. M. C. A. building, on the subject of Church Unity, it was decided that in January the Union will take steps to create interest in this important subject among laymen as well as ministers in the Charleston district. The ideal of the movement is a united Christianity, and those who heard the bishops' address believe firmly that it can be attained. Special consideration of the unity idea will be given at the January meeting.

Bishop Guerry was introduced to the meeting by the Rev. Dr. W. C. Davis, Chairman of the Program Committee. The session was conducted by the Rev. I. E. Long, President of the Union, who named a nominating committee which will make its report at the annual meeting next month.

The Rev. Paul McCullough, of Summersville, was introduced to the Union as a new member. It was announced that the January meeting will be held on the first Tuesday in the month instead of the first Monday, in light of the celebration of New Year's day on Monday.—Charleston Evening Post.

Dr. Wood sends word that he and Bishop Sanford arrived in Kyoto December 12, and found all well there.

MARYLAND.

Rt Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Coadjutor.

The Rev. Penegrine Wroth, D. D.

The death of the Rev. Peregrine Wroth, D. D., on December 9, in Baltimore, brings to a close an epochal ministry in this city, for he had been rector of a down-town church for fifty years, was intimately associated with the business section of old Baltimore, and was one of the most widely known and best beloved men in the city. At the time of his death, Dr. Wroth was rector-emeritus of his church, the Church of the Messiah, which is now in the suburbs, but for the major part of his ministry the church was located in the busiest section of the city.

In the religious life of the nation he will be remembered as having inaugurated the noon-day Lenten services, now so popular. For more than thirty years his church was crowded with men at these services.

The interment in a vault at Loudon Park Cemetery is temporary, for the vestry haev decided to honor his memory by burying him beneath the church to which he devoted his life. The present beautiful church will thus stand as his monument, and his name and memory will be forever linked with his beloved parish.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Christmas Carol Service.

The annual Cathedral Christmas Carol Service, which began with the first Christmas in Bethlehem Chapel in 1912, and which has come to be almost a necessary part of the Christmas joy of many of the Church people in Washington, will be held this year on Sunday, January 1, 1928, at four o'clock in the afternoon. Popular, ancient, modern, foreign and American carols will be sung by the full Cathedral choir. Edgar Priest is organist and choir-master.

U. S. Senate Chaplain.

Rev. Z. B. Phillips, D. D., rector of the Church of the Epiphany, has recently received the appointment as chaplain of the U. S. Senate. This is the first time in a long period of years that this office has been held by a clergyman of the Episcopal Church. Epiphany Church people and Dr. Phillips' many friends are offering congratulations to him and also to the Senate upon such an appointment.

$21,000.

By the will, recently filed for probate of T. Clarence R. Dix, the sum of $21,000 has been placed in trust, the income to be used for the maintenance of a free ward for white children under the age of twelve years, at the Episcopal Eye, Ear and Throat Hospital. If this hospital cannot accept this sum to be used this way, within six months, other institutions are named in a similar way and in the event that they cannot accept it, the income is to be paid to the Bishop of Washington.

American Guild of Organists.

The annual dinner and organ recital, given by the D. C. Chapter of the American Guild of Organists, to which members of the Chesapeake Chapter, Baltimore, and Virginia Chapter, Richmond, were invited, were held on December 15 at Epiphany Church. The dinner was followed by speeches by the Warden and General Treasurer of the Guild, and by other honor guests. The recital in Epiphany Church was played by Mr. Rollo Maitland, F. A. G. D., of Philadelphia. Rev. Z. B. Phillips, D. D., rector of Epiphany Church and Chaplain of the D. C. Chapter, A. T. O., was present at both dinner and recital, and conducted a short service and address in the church, in connection with the recital.

Rt. Rev. Frederic Llewellyn Deane, Lord Bishop of Aberdeen and Orkney and Very Rev. H. Erskine Hill, provist of St. Andrew's Cathedral, Aberdeen, Scotland, were in Washington during the past week and preached on Sunday, December 18, in Washington Churches. They are seeking the aid of American Churchmen for the Seabury Memorial in Aberdeen.

Christ Church, Williamsport, Reopened.

The reopening of Christ Church, Williamsport, the Rev. Hiram R. Bennett, rector, on the Second Sunday in Advent, after nearly six months of the congregation worshipping in the parish house, marked the fulfillment of the terms of the bequest of the late Mrs. Susan Baird, who left her estate to the parish for the express purpose of redecoration and beautifying the interior of the church. What made the occasion all the more remarkable is the fact that the estate of Miss Alma Baird, her daughter, was also given to the endowment fund of the parish. The Bairds were among the oldest and most devoted communicants of Christ Church, and George Westle Baird, husband and father of the testants, was a well-known carpenter and cabinet-maker in the old days of Williamsport.

A feature of the service was the donation, on the part of the congregation, of a handsome rose window over the high altar, as a memorial to the Baird family, and a testimonial of appreciation of their loyalty to the parish and their unselfish generosity which was always shown in their daily lives, as well as in this act of making Christ Church their heir.

Mr. Percy W. Fowler, a noted ecclesiastical architect of Trenton, N. J., was called in soon after Easter, and it was on his recommendations that the improvements were made, under the direction of Charles W. Feil & Co., of Williamsport.

Other memorials were blessed at the service, including a rector's stall from Charles Levering, in memory of his parents, and a priest's stall for the sanctuary from Miss Ann Doebler, in memory of her parents. Frederick W. Zahn has given a section of the new choir stalls in memory of his father, who was for many years a member of the choir. Mrs. Max L. Mitchell has given a sanctuary lamp for the side altar, where the sacrament is reserved for the sick.

Consecration.

On Sunday, December 11, 1927, the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Sterrett, D. D., consecrated the new chancel of Trinity Church, Bethlehem. During the summer practically the whole interior of the church was renovated.

Dean Gateson, of the Pro-Cathedral, brought the greetings from the "mother" to the "daughter" and warmly congratulated her on her new appearance and fine progress. The Bishop also complimented the rector and people on the fine result achieved.

The rector, the Rev. E. L. Haines, delivered an historical address.

Improvements at Norwood.

The children and grandchildren of the late Mr. Mayo Cabell have given to Christ Church, Norwood, a handsome pulpit as a memorial to him. The pulpit is simple in design and of solid walnut, in keeping with the other furniture of the church. It will be dedicated at the next visit of the Bishop.

Mr. Cabell was for many years a communicant and vestryman of Christ Church and it was largely through his efforts and liberality that the present edifice was erected about the year 1845.

The appearance and comfort of the church have recently been greatly improved by the installation of a new heating system—an "Estate Heatrola"—the gift of the Christ Church Aid Society. This takes the place of the two old-fashioned wood stoves in use heretofore.

Christ Church is in Nelson County and is one of the three under the care of the Rev. Frank Mezick; the other two being Trinity Church at Arrington and Grace at Massies Mill.

Christian Social Service.

A service and a conference on social service were held in St. Paul's Church, Savannah, on December 11, conducted by the Diocesan Department of Christian Social Service of this diocese, of which the Rev. Harry S. Cobey, of Albany, is vice-chairman and executive. At the service the address was given by the Rev. C. B. Wilmer, D. D., Professor of Practical Theology at the University of the South, who is part-time field secretary of the Committee on Social Service of the Fourth Province, of which the Bishop of South Carolina is chairman. Following the service there were three speakers for the conference, two of them giving brief talks on child-welfare.

During the afternoon the visiting clergymen and several other social workers visited the many county institutions. Chatham County has a chain of rural penal institutions that are known throughout the state as being of an exceptionally high standard. Nearly all of them are operated as farms, and consist of one for white and colored men, segregated; one for colored women; one for colored boys, a detention home for young colored girls and an unusually fine and up-to-date home for white women prisoners, which is not a farm. At the farm for colored boys about one hundred were assembled in the school room and a short service was held conducted by one of the Negro ministers of the city. The boys sang very beautifully several Negro "Spirituals", and Dr. Wilmer gave a short talk to the boys.

Gift to Sports Bay of Cathedral.

An unexpected gift of $50,000 from an anonymous source was announced just before a dinner of division chairmen of the nine bays of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine at the University Club last night as completing the $150,000 necessary for the building of the sports bay.

The gift was in the nature of an underwriting pledge and covers quotas assigned to various sports groups which have not yet been formally pledged. The underwriting pledge was obtained by General Charles H. Sherill, vice-chairman of the sports division and chairman of the historical and patriotic societies division, which recently reached its goal.

"It is a great surprise," said Bishop William T. Manning, "as well as a great satisfaction so soon after the completion of the fund for the Bay of the Historical and Patriotic Societies to be able to announce the completion of the fund for another of the nine community bays."

Twenty-six major sports are represented in the chapel window of the Sports Bay. This, according to Bishop Manning, will show that the cathedral is in touch with the whole of life.

Funds for other community bays were announced as follows: Military and naval, with Colonel George W. Burleigh as chairman, $100,986.81; education, Dr. John H. Finley, chairman, $62,450.24; press, William T. Dewart, $62,318.77; fine arts, Electus D. Litchfield, $46,878.36; legal profession, Judge Samuel Seabury, $42,395.00; New Jersey Dean Emory, $40,021.23; medical profession, Dr. J. Bentley Squier, $31,585.00.—New York Tribune, December 14, 1927.

Collect for Christmas Day.

Almighty God, Who hast given us Thy only begotten Son, to take our nature upon Him, and as at this time to be born of a pure virgin; Grant that we being regenerate, and made Thy children by adoption and grace, may daily be renewed by Thy Holy Spirit; through the same Our Lord Jesus Christ, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the same Spirit ever, one God, world without end. Amen.

Collect for First Communion Christmas

O God, Who maketh us glad with the yearly remembrance of the birth of Thine only Son, Jesus Christ; Grant that as we joyfully receive Him for our Redeemer, so we may with sure confidence behold Him when He shall come to be our Judge Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen.

Collect for St. Stephen's Day.

Grant, O Lord, that, in all our sufferings here upon earth for the testimony of Thy truth, we may steadfastly look up to heaven, and by faith behold the glory that shall be revealed; and, being filled with the Holy Ghost, may learn to love and bless our persecutors by the example of Thy first martyr, St. Stephen, who prayed for his murderers to Thee, O blessed Jesus, Who standest at the right hand of God, to succor all those who suffer for Thee, our only Mediator and Advocate. Amen.

Collect for St. John the Evangelist's Day.

Merciful Lord, we beseech Thee to cast Thy bright beams of light upon Thy Church, that it, being instructed by the doctrine of Thy blessed apostle and evangelist, St. John, may so walk in the light of Thy truth that it may at length attain o everlasting life; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

Collect for the Innocents' Day.

O Almighty God, Who out of the mouths of babes and sucklings hast ordained strength and made infants to glorify Thee by their deaths; Mortify and kill all vices in us, and so strengthen us by Thy grace that by the innocency of our lives and constancy of our faith even unto death we may glorify Thy holy name; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

To Bethlehem!

F. B. Stone.

To Bethlehem, to Bethlehem,
We haste with eager feet,
The new-born Christ and Saviour there
With loving hearts to greet!
The love of God incarnate now
In Mary's infant Son,
We find there in the manger laid,
Life's mystery begun!

Christ Jesus came to save the world;
From strength to strength He grew,
As on His Father's love He called,
As on His grace He drew;
O Christ, Thou blessed One, the world
Must learn to walk like Thee,
If it would gain what Thou didst win
For it on bended knee!

'Twas there Thy victories were won,
For all mankind, for me,
For Thou didst early learn to meet
Thy God upon Thy knee,
There, too, would we meet Him, meet Thee,
This happy Christmas Day
In spirit kneel in Bethlehem,
And at Thy feet would pray.

A Christmas Prayer.

Almighty God, we give Thee thanks for the mighty yearning of the human heart for the coming of a Saviour, and the constant promise of Thy Word that He was to come. In our own souls we repeat the humble sighs and panting aspirations of ancient men and ages, and own that our souls are in darkness and infirmity without faith in Him who comes to bring God to man and man to God. We bless Thee for the tribute we can pay to Him from our very sense of need and dependence, and that our own hearts can so answer from the wilderness the cry, "Prepare ye the Way of the Lord". In us the rough places are to be made smooth, the crooked straight, the mountains of pride brought low, and the valleys of despondency lifted up. O God, prepare Thou the way in us now, and may we welcome anew Thy Holy Child. Hosanna! blessed be He that cometh in the name of the Lord!—Samuel Osgood.

Outside the Jerusalem Gate.

Myrtle Humphreys.

St. Stephen is thought to have been a Hellenist or Grecian Jew, and was evidently very young. For this reason, his name is a favorite appellation often bestowed upon schools which are exclusively for boys. Upon him fell the honor of being the first to die for Our Lord, and his day occurs upon December 26, next to the birthday of Jesus Christ. He was brought before the Jewish Council, and charged with being a blasphemer, and as he listened to their accusation, his face became so transfigured that it appeared like the face of an angel.

In his subsequent speech, he reproached them with being the murderers of Jesus Christ; and so infuriated were they with the truth of this accusation that they resorted to mob violence. Disregarding all restrictions of Roman law, their seized Stephen and dragged him through the city and out at what was probably the Damascus gate. Here they stoned him to death, and he said his last beautiful prayer: "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." Then as the account exquisitely renders it "he fell asleep".

Being without the sanction of the Roman law, his execution was absolutely illegal; but it appears that Saul, himself a Roman citizen, assumed most of the responsibility concerning it. One wonders what was passing in his mind as he stood guard over the pile of garments and watched the onrushing mob wreak their vengeance upon the innocent young martyr. Some one has aptly remarked that in spite of subsequent events, Saul's conversion must really have begun when he stood and watched Stephen die.

It has been pointed out that although Stephen was a marvelous preacher, his eloquence seems to have made slight impression upon his hearers. By his life, therefore, he seems to have accomplished little, but by his death, he gave impetus to a movement which was to set the world afire. The color for the day is red, and the name Stephen means a crown.

The Mother of Our Lord.

Part II.

That being so, we are prepared to learn that Mary was of a meditative nature. Luke tells us twice, as if to fix our thoughts upon it, that she kept things quiet in her heart. Once when the shepherds came with their amazing tidings of the chorus of angels in the sky at Bethlehem; once when the Boy had been lost and then was found in eager converse with the Temple doctors, Luke tells us how Mary kept it in her heart—laid it up there as a secret thing—never breathed a word of it to anybody. Clearly a woman who had the gift of silence as truly as she had the gift of song; a woman who knew that there are things you tarnish the moment you begin to speak of them; a woman who set a guard upon her lips—felt that, without its secret, life was poor—recognized the indignity of gossiping. There are mothers who can talk of nothing but their children. Mary was not a mother of that kind. With the most wonderful child that ever woman nursed, she was silent about Him, and held her peace in Nazareth. She dreamed her dreams, and had her own sweet thoughts, and prayed to God and had her cradle-music—and all the time she kept things in her heart. The beautiful thing is that as her son grew up, He showed so evidently His mother's influence. You talk of the power of speech our Saviour had—have you ever thought of His power of keeping silence? And it seems to me that the reserve of Christ, which added to His authority so mightily, goes, back, like His love of the flowers and of the birds, to the days of boyhood in the village home. There is many a son you will never understand unless you know something of his mother. Traits of his character—little compunctions — tendernesses—it is the mother who explains them all. And so in the perfect character of Christ are traits that you can never understand till you remember the motherhood of Mary. When I see Him standing before Pilate; when I find Him refusing to say a single word; when I think how often He was urged to speak and how often He refused to speak; it is then this text comes back to me out of the happy days of home and childhood: "Mary kept all these things within her heart."

There is another glimpse we get of the Virgin-mother, and we get it in the song she sang. There is one feature of that song you note at once. It is not merely a welling-up of praise; it is a song that is steeped in the Old Testament. The words are scarcely Mary's words at all; they are from the treasury of psalmist and of prophet. "My soul doth magnify the Lord"—that long ago had been the cry of Hannah. "He hath shewed strength with His arm"—that is not Mary's, it is David's. And there are words of Job, in the Magnificat, and thoughts taken from the song of Moses, and golden utterances of Isaiah. That does not mean that Mary was a plagiarist. It does not mean that for that tumultuous hour she scanned the pages of psalmist and of prophet. It means that Mary had a heart so full of all that was written in the Word of God, that in that hour it came welling to her lips. Upon the Bible she had fed her heart. She had lived in the fellowship of all its noble teaching. In maiden meditation, fancy free, she had turned to the glorious heritage of Israel. In the quiet and unrecorded years of girlhood she had prayed and studied in the light of heaven, and now the witness of the years was in her speech. Is not that one mark of our great hours? Do they not reveal the life we have been living? Do they not show what we have loved or hated in the hidden days when there was none to see? And so in this great hour of Mary's life, when she is lifted into the gaze of all the world, the past that stands revealed to all the world is one of beautiful and earnest piety. No need to ask now where our Lord was taught these ancient Scriptures that He loved so truly. With such a mother, whose heart and life were full of them, we can understand the secret now. That wonderful knowledge of prophet and of psalmist that was the sword of Jesus as it was His stay, began in the teaching at His mother's knee.

I close by asking you if you remember what is the last glimpse we get of Mary? It is one of the most beautiful touches in the Scriptures. It is not an appearance of the risen Christ to her, for we never read that He appeared to Mary. It is not a vision of her as the queen of heaven, for she is never mentioned in the Revelations. It is something far more womanly than that; something far more human and more tender. After Jesus had ascended into glory we read of a little company who gathered in Jerusalem—in the upper room, to pray. And that is the last glimpse we get of Mary—for the Apostle tells us she was there—and so in prayer she passed out of sight. Not reigning on any heavenly throne, not wielding any authority with Christ, not lifted up in any queenly dignity with the universe worshipping the Mother of God. But a woman—praying—like any other sinner, whose only hope of power and peace and glory lay in the work that ended on the Cross. It is with that last thought we think of Mary. It is thus that she, too, leads us to the Saviour; whose is the only name given among men whereby we must be saved.—Dr. G. H. Morrison, D. D. Glasgow.

Christmas.

Christmas is the source of all Christian Doctrine. Once grant the Incarnation of the Word, and all the articles of the Creed range themselves as the natural consequences of that Event.

It is, indeed, true that any one fact does, in its complete analysis and farthest reach, mean all other facts. But only God can see how this is.

For us men there are pivotal facts, cardinal crises, from which we take our widest and clearest view of the universe.

Of such the Birth of Jesus Christ is transcendantly supreme. What God meant in creating us, what is the drama this strange world stages, what glorious future beckons us—it is all flashed out by the Christmas Gospel.

That Gospel, or "Good News", is of an historic event and a philosophic disclosure; it tells of a visible happening out of which issues an eternal force.

All men nowadays are thrilled by the tale of the earthly life of Jesus—the tale of Him Who went about doing good, Who spoke the miraculous parables and wrought the parabolic miracles, Who preached the Sermon on the Mount and the Discourse at the Last Supper, Who walked the dolorous way to the Cross.

But many men do not perceive that this tale gains its highest value from its starting with the Birth at Bethlehem of One Who was uniquely the Son of God—Who was indeed Very God.

"And so the Word had breath, and wrought
With human hands that creed of creeds,
In loveliness of perfect deeds
More strong than all poetic thought."

Yes, the Word, God the Son—it is this which places Jesus Christ so utterly above all other prophets and teachers. They told what they knew about God; He showed God. His own declaration is "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father". He is, as ancient prophecy said "Emmanuel, God with us".

The affection displayed, the power displayed, the purpose displayed, by Jesus, are the tremendous motives which they are, because He is Divine as well as Human, "the Son of God Who loved me and gave Himself for me".

That is the Christmas Evangel; the Baby Who lay in the manger was as divine as the Man Who wore the crown of thorns. His infancy was an integral part of His redemptive work. In its very impotence it was puissance; in its poverty it was wealth; in its humiliation it was glory.

He came from the higher world, and angels followed Him to the verge of this world with congratulating song. And then He took the conditions of earth and wrought out the redemption of mankind by becoming man.

But, we must ever observe, with the Humanity was the Deity. As St. Paul says, "though He was rich, for your sakes He became poor". "He was rich." That means a pre-existence whose riches He put by.

As St. Paul again says, "He emptied Himself, taking the form of a servant". That also means a pre-existence when He was a lord in splendor.

Yes, the primary idea of Christmas—the only idea which will insure a perpetual observance of Christmas—is that it commemorates the Birth of a Son of Man Who was also in fullest sense the Son of God.—Palm Branch.

For Christmas Day.

Give light, glad morn!
Proclaim, sweet horn,
The season in,
With merry din;
Break, bells, and chime!
Wake, hearts, and rime;
For love, and Christ,
And Christmas-time.

Deck, white, pure snow!
Lift, wind, and blow,
Foul things away
On Jesus' day;
Go, sin nd pride!
Good-will, spread wide,
For love, and Christ,
And Christmas-tide.

Ring out, clear voice!
Free soul, make choice
Of Him who came—
(God save His name)
Speak, lips, and say!
Bow, knees, and pray;
For love, and Christ,
And Christmas-day.

Jackie Takes a Nap.

Donald Chisolm Trenholm,
(Age 13 Years.)

It had been a very busy day. As early as nine o'clock in the morning the toy department in Smith & Smith's big store was crowded. And all day the people had surged back and forth—every elevator adding its share.

By five-thirty the tired clerks were very glad to leave for home; but when every light was out and the big doors closed, there was one member of that vast army of workers that was left behind in the deserted store.

Jackie, a little messenger boy in the "Toys" was fast asleep under a counter, a big blue elephant keeping silent watch beside him.

It was ten o'clock by the big clock on the City Hall when Jackie awoke and looked wonderingly about him.

Where was he? What had happened? Why wasn't he at home in his own bed?

Then in a flash it all came back to him. He remembered crawling under the counter to rest for a few minutes. He had been so very tired.

And he had fallen asleep!

He lay quite still for a few moments, watching a moon-beam at play on the floor, and wondering how he was going to get home and if his mother was worrying about him.

"Well," he said to himself, stretching his cramped arms and legs. "I'd better go downstairs and ask the watchman to let me out. My! but won't he be surprised when he sees me."

He was crawling out of his hiding place when his eye was caught by a queer flickering light.

What could it be? he wondered. It was not a moon-beam, he knew.

Suddenly a terrible fear shook him. He jumped to his feet, running in the direction of the light.

Yes, it was just as he had thought: fire! The store was on fire!

In an instant he was across the floor and speeding down the long flights of stairs that led to the cellar.

Luckily he found the watchman there.

"Fire—fire!" he cried breathlessly, grabbing him by the arm. "The store is on fire! Quick, Mr. Mack, turn in the alarm. The toys will burn up and the children won't have any for Christmas."

The watchman did not stop to ask Jackie what he was doing in the store at that time of night. He ran to the fire-box under the steps and turned in the alarm. And in a very little while the engines arrived, putting out the fire before any great damage had been done. Most of the toys were safe.

The next morning Jackie was the hero of the hour; every one crowded round him, congratulating him on his bravery.

At noon Mr. Smith, one of the owners of the store, sent for him.

"Jackie, my boy," he said, holding out his hand, "I want to reward you for your quickness of thought last night. Here is fifty dollars in gold for your mother. She should be very proud of her son. And now I want you to go with me to the toy department and pick out something for yourself. Do not think of the cost. You not only saved the toys for the children, but you saved me a great deal of money—"

And so it came about that a proud and happy boy numbered among his Christmas presents a beautiful, shining bicycle.

Ann's Happiest Christmas.

V. Doris Harnaker.

Some weeks before the joyous Christmas season, little Ann, aged eight, had expressed to her mother a very great desire for a doll just like Helen Grayson's, her little school chum. Helen's doll was as large as a real baby, with big blue eyes that opened and closed, and soft lashes. Ann told her mother that it had a sweet smile, like many real babies she had seen, and it could cry: "Mama."

Helen had carried it to school one day, and it was dressed in some of the very clothes Helen had worn when she was about one year old, and this appealed very much to Ann, as she had seen so many times, some of her baby clothes that her mother had packed away in her own little trunk.

So Ann wrote a letter to Santa Claus, telling him what she longed for, describing the doll fully.

Ann had been sleeping upstairs with Grandmother, who was spending the holidays with them, so when her father called her early Christmas morning, saying that the living room was cozy and warm, and that Santa Claus had surely been there from the looks of the beautiful tree, you may be sure Ann lost no time in hurrying downstairs. But after Ann had examined the tree and the packages which laid beneath it her little face drooped with disappointment.

Her father, noticing this, asked: "What is it, dear?"

"Father," she said, "do you think Santa Claus read my letter?"

Her father, after a careful search, exclaimed, "O Ann, here's a letter for you, but first I want you to go in to see your mother".

Can you imagine her astonishment, when there beside her mother lay a real, live baby, with a tiny bit of hair on his head, and two tiny tightly clenched red fists? After hugging her mother and father, and bestowing kisses on the new arrival, Ann asked her father if he would read Santa Claus' letter, and, with the happiest face, Ann listened, while her father read:

"My Dear Ann: I enjoyed reading your letter very much, but after I found that you have a baby brother for a Christmas present, I decided you would not want a doll baby, so I will give that to some little girl who is not so fortunate as you are. I am leaving a few things I hope you will like, and I am also leaving a package with some pretty clothes for the baby. I know you will enjoy helping your mother care for this baby, and selecting the clothes he is to wear when he goes visiting. Let me know next Christmas if you were satisfied without the doll. Happy New Year! Santa Claus."

When Ann's little friend, Helen, came in to see if Ann had gotten her doll, she, too, was amazed to see the real baby, and as she gazed upon the dear little face tears rolled down her cheeks, as she confessed that she had prayed for a brother or sister, and had gotten the doll instead. "Oh!" she exclaimed, "how I wish a real baby had been left at our house; I get so lonely with no one to play with." Then Ann told Helen that every time she thanked God for sending her this precious brother, she was going to ask him to send a real baby to Helen's home, too.

I wonder if you can guess what her reply will be to Santa Claus, next Christmas.

Christmas Eve.

The mountain road on Christmas Eve was like a highway in fairyland. Snow had fallen all day long until tree and bush and field and fence had become as things of magic, and the road stretched away like a band of white ribbon that lost itself in the hazy distance. And everywhere sparkled the tiniest gems, hundreds and thousands, in the light of the lowering sun.

And now, down the alluring road came three children, running and shouting and frightening the snow birds that did not know it was Christmas Eve.

"Wait!" cried one, a little boy in a ragged, brown coat, who was being left behind.

"Come on, Billy," called his sister, turning to wait for him. "Don't take so long."

Billy came trotting, and his cheeks burned red beneath his tattered cap.

"Oh, the 'possum's up the 'simmon tree,
The 'simmon tree, the 'simmon tree;
The 'possum's up the 'simmon tree,
A-laughing at the moon."

The older boy was waiting now, shuffling his feet as he sang.

"Sam," said the girl as they came up, "you'd better take Billy's money and put it in your pocket. He's goin' to slip and fall and lose it, I know."

"No, I'm not, either," declared Billy, gripping his hand defiantly and holding it behind him.

Just as he spoke his feet slipped and down he sprawled in the snow.

"Unh!" he exclaimed, scrambling up.

"I knew it! I knew it!" cried the girl. Now, I bet you've lost it."

"No, I haven't, either," retorted Billy, holding out triumphant hand, in which gleamed a shining quarter.

Sam stood off and grinned.

"Better let me have it, like Moon says," he recommended.

For answer Billy strode past him and led the way down the road.

"What you goin' to get, Moon?" asked Sam presently.

"I don't know," she answered. "What are you goin' to get?"

"I might get that book," said Sam.

"Robinson Crusoe?" she asked.

"Yes."

"Can you get it for a quarter?"

"I don't know."

There was a moment's silence.

"I know what I'm goin' to get," Billy declared.

"What?" the others asked.

"Pop-gun," he answered.

"Pop-gun?" repeated Sam. "You can't get a pop-gun for a quarter."

"Yes, you can, can't you, Moon?"

"I don't know," said Moon.

"Jim said so," Billy argued.

"Aw, Jim don't know," said Sam.

"Yes, he does," insisted Billy.

They pondered this as they went along, trudging down the road. They knew that all they would get for Christmas was what they were going now to buy, because a quarter for each of them was all that could be spared of the small sum their father had saved before he was hurt. After a time Moon spoke:

"What about Ma and Dad?"

For a little while there was no answer. When it came it was from Billy.

"I tell you!" he exclaimed, halting. "Let's spend it all for them."

Sam and Moon stared. It was a stupendous thought.

"Yes, yes!" cried Moon. "Let's do it."

Sam waved his cap in the air.

"Hooray!" he shouted. "The very thing!"

And off down the road they ran as fast as they could go.

It was some time later when they returned with their precious packages, and the sun was just hiding beyond the horizon. They were quieter now, and very thoughtful; but their hearts were glad, because every penny of their three quarters had been spent on presents for their mother and crippled father.

Presently, as they trudged along homeward, they heard singing behind them. A stranger was approaching, and was now close at hand.

"Oh, the funny man rode on a hobby horse,
A hobby horse, a hobby horse.
The funny man rode on a hobby horse,
Yo-ho! Yo-ho! Yo-ho!

"Oh, the funny man jumped in the air and danced,
And danced and danced, and danced and danced,
The funny man jumped in the air and danced,
Yo-ho! Yo-ho! Yo-ho!"

The singing stranger smiled as he sang, and the children stared in wonder. He wore a faded brown overcoat, and was bent with a burden which he carried on his back. But his soft hat curled up jauntily in front and his ruddy face was bright with a look of friendliness.

"Good evening," he said cheerily, coming up to them, and swung his bulging sack to the ground.

"Unh!" he grunted, straightening up. "That's a pretty good load when you're not used to it."

The children stood without a word, wondering who he might be and whence and whither bound, what was in his sack and why he sang. The man glanced from one to the other.

"Seems like Christmas, doesn't it?" he began again.

"Tomorrow is Christmas," said Billy.

"Well, well, so it is," returned the stranger. "And have you written your letters to Santa Claus?"

Billy glanced at Sam.

"He ain't comin' to our house this time," said Sam.

"Oh!" exclaimed the man.

There was a moment's silence.

"He ain't been for three years," added Moon.

"Is that so?" replied the stranger. "That's too bad."

He swung his sack over his shoulder again, and they set out together up the road.

"I guess he just can't get everywhere," the man said.

"No," echoed Moon.

There was a short pause.

"Have you any other brothers and sisters?" the stranger asked.

"No," replied Moon, "just ma and dad."

"And Shep," added Billy, "he's our dog."

And now as they walked along and talked the daylight gradually changed to twilight, and it seemed as if the white world about them was wrapped in a veritable spell of enchantment.

"And do you have prayers together in the evenings?" asked the stranger at length.

"No," Moon answered.

There was another brief silence.

"I wish you did," said the stranger.

Presently they rounded a curve in the road and the lighted window of a cottage came into view.

"That's my house," said Billy.

"I see," replied the man. "So you're most home."

"We've got some presents for ma and dad," Billy informed.

"Well!" exclaimed the stranger. "That's lovely."

When they reached the gate he paused.

"I hope you'll have a Merry Christmas," he said.

"Merry Christmas," echoed Sam, looking up at him through the dusk.

"I wish you'd do me a favor," the man added, swinging sack to the ground. "This bag is getting right heavy and I don't think I'll carry it any further. Would you mind taking it in for me? I don't know when I'll be back this way and if you find anything in it you want, you may have it."

Then he pulled something from his pocket.

"And give this to your father and mother," he said.

He handed it to Billy, who saw it was a little white box. And before the children said a word the stranger had disappeared in the gathering darkness.

"Jumpin' crickets!" exclaimed Sam. "Here! Catch hold!"

Amidst great excitement they lugged the bulging sack into the house, and half dragged, half carried it to where their crippled father sat by the open fire. Billy tripped and almost fell into his lap. Their mother was at their heels, asking questions which they barely heard and did not heed.

And now followed great and still greater excitement as they plunged into the bag and drew forth its contents; a football, a doll, story books, horns, checkers, dominoes, other games, bright ribbons, jumping jack, doll trunk, bouncing ball, a knife, candy canes, harps, oranges, figs, a watch, marbles, nuts, a fruit cake, coloring pencils, a flute and a little train.

In the midst of the excitement and shouts of delight, Billy clapped hand to pocket and held up the little white box.

"Look!" he yelled. "Look! This is for ma and dad!"

His mother took the little box and opened it. The children crowded about her. Inside, upon soft white cotton, lay two sparkling twenty dollar gold pieces. —J. C. Jamison.

Christmas Communion.

Come in, dear Babe, and rest!
Cold is the night and keen;
Here is no Mother with her tender breast,
Her long hair's silken screen,
To hide from Thee the stable poor and mean.

There are no angel-folk
Hung between Heaven and earth,
Making the night a glory, and no flock
Of stars that sing for mirth
Because of the wonderful, long-looked for Birth.

It is so dark and cold,
Colder than Bethlehem was;
Here are no sheets with lavender in fold,
Nor even the pleached grass.
Cold as a stone, cold is my heart, alas†

But two gaunt beasts are here,
Not meet for Thy delight;
Ox of my appetites, misspent and drear,
Ass of my folly light,
Hanging their heads, Thy courtiers are tonight.

Not like those innocent things
That shook the bed for Thee;
Here are no shepherd men, here are no kings
With gifts in their degree;
Cold, bare, and empty, yet wilt come to me?

Cold as the clay, and hard,
Yet wilt Thou come as of yore?
I who have neither gold nor spikenard,
Thou Hope as long before!
For Thee, for Thee, the stable waits once more.

—Katharine Tynan.

A Christmas Candle.

Janey lived in the poorer part of the town. Janey's father was dead, and her mother had moved from the beautiful country to the big city thinking to find more work and so be better able to care for her little girl.

Janey was often alone. She lived near her school and there she spent her days. At the close of school each day she lost no time but hurried home to do the simple housekeeping of the two small rooms. These rooms were poorly furnished, but they were beautiful, for they were neat and tidy and glowed with love and cheer.

This was Friday night and Christmas Eve. Janey's mother would work late at the big store and so Janey must make her own Christmas preparations.

She swept and dusted the rooms carefully and put up fresh curtains at the two windows. Then she climbed up on a chair and took down an old-fashioned saucer-shaped candlestick from the highest shelf in this dish-cupboard. In it she placed a beautiful red candle, and placed it in the kitchen window.

"There," she said to herself as she lighted it, "that will show that I have not forgotten the Christ-child, and perhaps it will give good cheer to many passers-by this snowy Christmas Eve."

A bright star twinkled merrily from behind a cloud as Janey peered out, and seemed to throw its beams straight into Janey's eyes.

"I wonder how those wise men learned so much from that other star?" thought Janey to herself as she turned from the window toward the fire.

She picked up her copy of Anderson's "Fairy Tales", and turned to the story of "The Little Match Girl". The wonder and beauty of Christmas lifted her up. She felt that God was good—the star? "How did those people of old know it was His star?"

She started up from her chair. A strange child stood in the room beside her. Silently as he came he held out his hand toward her. His dress was curious—a long robe of coarse cloth held at the waist by a girdle. About his shoulders was thrown a sheep's skin, in his hand was held a staff and at the crook of his arm hung an odd-shaped bundle with a covering of skin. At his feet lay a similar bundle and without instruction Janey knew she was to carry this bundle. She took it and out of the house they sped.

Janey was astonished to see that the ugly rows of flats had shriveled into little one-story houses with flat roofs. Vari-colored stone had replaced ugly red brick. The shapes and sizes differed when the street twisted and turned.

The moon was shining fitfully and stray snowflakes straggled down. It was not long before Janey and her companion reached the outskirts of the town and then the open country.

Being country-born, Janey noticed that the land was poor and stony, and, without any words on the part of the boy, she divined that they were carrying food to men at work in the fields. The coarse grass, and barrenness of the ground, told her also that these men were probably shepherds—"abiding in the fields, keeping watch over their flocks."

The two hurried along silently and soon they came to the edge of a small flock of sheep huddled about a smaller group of three or four shepherds. The boy freed his hand and swung it above his head, calling in a sweet voice, "Greetings, O Father! My mother has sent thee food".

"Welcome art thou, O my son!" returned a shepherd on the far side of the fire, rising to embrace the lad. Then followed much talk about the crowded condition of the town, and of relatives who had come from distant places to pay their tax to the Roman Government. Also there was much bitter grumbling against the tyrant, Herod, who robbed the poor of their hard-earned money. The bundles were opened, and dried cheese and sweet cakes were passd about.

The boy's father wrapped the empty skins together and stooped to tie them. In the act he stood transfixed and a low exclamation escaped him, but before he could utter a word, a light, brighter than they had ever seen came upon them, "and the glory of the Lord shone round about them, and they were sore afraid".

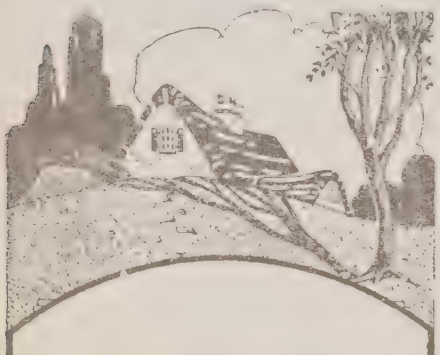
Panic gripped both shepherds, and sheep, and they would have fled in dismay but a voice stilled them, saying, "Unto you is born a Saviour, which is Christ, the Lord!"

Then there filled the air a chorus of heavenly voices, saying, "Glory to God in the highest! Peace on earth, good will toward men"!

Great happiness spread among these humble men. They seized their staffs and started toward the stony road over which Janey and her guide had come.

"The Light! The Light!" thought Janey, straggling along behind. "The light is so bright—the Star?" "Janey, Janey; will you ever waken, Sleepy Head? Mother will put you to bed. It would never do for Santa to find you here."

Janey looked around the familiar room. Sleepily, she allowed her mother to undress her and it was not until she was tucked safely in bed that she said, "I wish, mother, that you had not come so soon. I wanted to see Mary and the Tiny Jesus".



"Poor child, she is still asleep," thought her mother.

The candle flamed up.

"God bless us—that must be a Christmas candle," thought the old cobbler, across the street as he put up his shutters and locked his shop for the night. "I'll just take the wife a bit of candy." —Exchange.

Unspotted lambs to follow the one Lamb,
Unspotted doves to wait on the one Dove;
To whom Love saith, "Be with Me where I am",
And lo! their answer unto Love is love.
For tho' I know not any note they know,
Nor know one word of all their song above,
I know Love speaks to them, and even so
I know the answer unto Love is love.
Christina Rossetti.

"Still to ears attuned to Heaven
Sounds the angelic minstrelsy;
Still to waiting eyes is given
God in human form to see.
Come then, Holy Child, oh, come!
And our hearts shall make Thy home."

With Christmas may there come to you the memories of a merry childhood and the pleasures of mature accomplishments.

You Know?

That many of the great Bible teachers of the present day were set straight in their knowledge of the Word of God by a little booklet by Dr. C. I. Scofield called

"RIGHTLY DIVIDING THE WORD OF TRUTH"?
(The original Edition)

God has wonderfully used this series of ten lectures, fundamental to a clear understanding of the Bible:

1. The Jew, the Gentile and the Church of God.
2. The Seven Dispensations.
3. The Two Adverts.
4. The Two Resurrections.
5. The Five Judgments.
6. Law and Grace.
7. The Believer's Two Natures.
8. The Believer's Standing and State.
9. Salvation and Rewards.
10. Believers and Professors.

God certainly gave us this little book through his servant—not added revelation but Spirit-given interpretation.

Here are a few out of many letters, showing how much this little booklet has helped.

"* * I praise God for its marvelous ministry, and hope you can spread this still further."—C. G. Trumbell, Editor Sunday-School Times.

"To my great loss I did not know the book until late in my ministry."—James M. Gray.

Deaths

GRYMES: Entered into rest November 28, 1927, at Orange, Va., MARY LEWIS Grymes and his wife, Katherine Grymes, of Orange, Va.

"And with the morn, those angel faces smile,
Which she had loved long since, and lost awhile."

THOMAS RICE JACKSON.

Entered into eternal rest, Trursday, October 20, 1927, at Montross, Va., in the fifty-fifth year of his life, THOMAS RICE JACKSON, son of the late Samuel R. and Lucy Rice Jackson. For twenty-seven years Mr. Jackson was vestryman of St. James Church and during that time served twenty years as Junior Warden, and for past seven years was Senior Warden.

He was a native of Westmoreland county and had spent most of his life at Montross, the County seat, where he was engaged in business and was among the county's most widely known and esteemed citizens.

He married Ethel A. Sandy, who, with four daughters and a son survives him. He leaves also one brother and two sisters.

An earnest follower of Christ, faithful member of his church, a loyal husband, a devoted father, a true friend and a splendid citizen, honorable in all business relations, his passing has caused general and genuine regret.

Genial, sympathetic and companionable, singularly steadfast and sincere, his life was a moral straight line—the shortest distance between man and God.

"I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness."

T. P. B.

MRS. ELLA RUTHERFOORD WHEAT.

On the morning of November 16, 1927, MRS. ELLA RUTHERFOORD WHEAT, age seventy-five, "passed over the river to rest awhile in the shade of the trees". She was the youngest daughter of the late Samuel and Frances Rutherfoord, and widow of Dr. Lewis Wheat. A loving mother, a loyal friend, a woman of surpassing gentleness, a consistent member of All Saints Church, she was mindful not of herself but gave unselfishly to those with whom she came in contact.

Physically, Mrs. Wheat was as fragile as a flower, in appearance she was exquisitely dainty. To those of us left, let us feel, "That's best which God sends. 'Twas His will."

FRANCIS A. LEWIS.

Resolutions.

Whereas it has pleased Almighty God in His wise providence, to take out of this world the soul of FRANCIS A. LEWIS; and

Whereas for forty-two years Mr. Lewis served the Church of St. James the Less as vestryman and accounting warden, in which church his mother was reared and of which his maternal grandfather was one of the founders; and

Whereas in the history of the Parish no one man has ever had a greater length of service or been more faithful in the performance of his duties or more devoted to furthering the best interests of the Parish; therefore be it

Resolved, That in his death the Rector, Church Wardens and Vestrymen of the church of St. James the Less have suffered an irreparable loss, and humbly commend his soul into the hands of God, with a thankful remembrance of his life and service; and be it further

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes and copies sent to his family and the Church press.

Attest:
SAMUEL T. WAGNER,
Secretary.

Germantown, Pa., December 2, 1927.

MRS. SOPHRANIA JAMES HUNDLEY.

Entered into the life eternal on November 16, 1927, at Lutherville, Md., MRS. SOPHRONIA JAMES HUNDLEY, widow of the late Rev. J. Hervey Hundley, D. D., in the 96th year of her age.

The subject of this brief sketch was born in Essex county, Va., in 1832, and was educated at Mrs. Southgate's School in King and Queen county and at Mrs. Gray's, in Tappahannock. Mrs. Gray's School, which later passed into the hands of Mrs. John P. McGuire, was noted for its thorough training and for its atmosphere of Christian culture and refinement.

At the age of 20, beautiful and greatly admired, she became the bride of Mr. James Hervey Hundley, later the Rev. Dr. Hundley, beloved Rector of St. Luke's Church, Essex county. Their beautiful home, Rose Hill, was famed for its gracious hospitality and its happy home life. Here there grew to manhood and womanhood three sons and daughters whose lives have spoken more eloquently than words could do of the spirit and ideals of that home.

Five of the children survive: Dr. J. Mason Hundley and Mrs. W. H. Farinholt, of Baltimore, Dr. Peyton Hundley, of Essex, Mrs. George D. Richardson, of Lutherville, Md., and Mrs. John F. Anderson, of New Brunswick, N. J. One son of great promise, Dr. Larkin Hundley, died a few years after beginning the practice of medicine in his native county.

If grace and beauty of character; if gentleness and sweetness of disposition; if the ability to fashion a home after the likeness of the one "not made with hands", are as most men believe, among the finest contributions we can make to life then Mrs. Hundley has left the world infinitely richer for having lived.

In her closing years she was surrounded by the love of kindred and friends and her life was peaceful, serene and happy. She suffered no eclipse of mental powers nor lingering illness and her end was

"Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch
About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams".

It was falling asleep to awaye up in the likeness of Him whom she had served with a loyal devotion through her long life.

"For all the saints who from their labors rest,
Who Thee by faith before the world confessed,
Thy name, O Jesus, be forever blest..
Alleluia."

Incarnation, Garden City, the Rt. Rev. Ernest M. Stires, D. D., Bishop of this Diocese, will advance to the priesthood his eldest son, the Rev. Ernest Van-Rensselaer Stires. Mr. Stires will be presented by the Rev. Wallace E. Rollins, D. D., Professor of Church History in the Virginia Theological Seminary. Other assisting clergy will be the Rev. Alexander Zabriskie, of Alexandria, the Rev. W. Russell Bowie, D. D., rector of Grace Church, New York, and the Rev. Stephen Webster of East Orange, N. J. The Rev. Mr. Stires was ordained deacon last spring by his father in the chapel of the Seminary at Alexandria. He was at once appointed to establish a new mission at Bellerose, one of the recently developed parts of Queens Borough, under the supervision of Archdeacon Duffield. He will continue in charge of this work.

On St. Andrew's Day, 1927, in St. David's Church, Bangor, Pa., the Rev. Frederick Thomas Trafford was ordained to the priesthood. The Rev. John W. Schmalstieg said Morning Prayer and the Litany; Dean D. Wilmot Gateson, of the Pro-Cathedral, preached the sermon; Bishop Sterrett ordained Mr. Trafford and celebrated the Holy Communion; the Archdeacon read the Epistle and administered the Chalice. Mr. Trafford is the Y. M. C. A. Secretary of Lehigh University, Bethlehem. His Sundays are free and he serves this mission.

On the Third Sunday in Advent, the Rev. Stuart Franklin Gast, B. A., was ordained a Priest by Bishop Darlington in St. Luke's Church, Mechanicsburg. The candidate was presented by the Rev. John H. Schwacke, of Freehold, N. J. The sermon was preached by the Very Rev. Allen P. Van Meter, of Germantown, Pa. The Rev. George D. Graeff, of Chambersburg, was the Epistoler, and the Rev. Harry G. Hartman of Lancaster, the Gospeller. The Rev. A. M. Judd, of Harrisburg, acted as Master of Ceremonies and read the Litany.

The Rev. Mr. Gast is a graduate of Franklin and Marshall College, Lancaster, and the General Theological Seminary. He will continue as Vicar of Mechanicsburg and adjacent missions.

On November 19 Mr. John A. Wilson, Jr., was ordained to the diaconate by the Rt. Rev. Robert Carter Jett, D. D. The Rev. Edward W. Hughes of Pearisburg preached the sermon. The Rev. Herbert H. Young, Dean of Associate Missions, presented the candidate and read the Epistle. The Rev. John S. Wellford of Norton said the Litany. The newly-ordained deacon read the gospel. Bishop Jett celebrated the Holy Communion, being assisted by Mr. Wilson.

Mr. Wilson, in 1906, went into the mission service in China and remained in this work until 1925, with the exception of a year spent in welfare work in France.

In 1925 he returned to America as lay missionary at Trinity Mission, Richlands, in the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia. Since that time he has continued in this work and has also rendered valuable service at other points in that section of the diocese under the direction of the Dean of Associate Missions. As deacon he will continue in the same capacity as heretofore, having his headquarters at Richlands.

In St. Mark's Church, Towner, N. D., on Tuesday, October 18, the Rt. Rev. J. Poyntz Tyler, D. D., advanced the Rev. Tom Gibbs Akeley to the priesthood.

The Rev. George H. Swift of Minot presented the candidate, and Archdeacon Harrington of Fargo preached the sermon. Mr. Akeley is to be minister-in-charge of St. Mark's Church, Towner, St. Paul's, Rugby, Grace, York, and St. Sylvan's, Dunseith, with residence at Towner.

$896,942

THIS IS THE SUM WHICH MUST BE COLLECTED IN DECEMBER BY THE DIOCESES FOR THE WORK OF THE GENERAL CHURCH IN ORDER TO BALANCE THE BUDGET

For the maintenance of the work of the General Church in 1927, General Convention approved a Budget of		$4,212,370
General Convention told the National Council to adjust appropriations yearly to meet expected income. In February, 1927, the National Council reduced appropriations under this "Pay-as-You-Go" Plan by the sum of		254,313
This left the net appropriations at		$3,958,057
The National Council estimated that it would be able to save during the year on these appropriations because of vacancies in the staff and other savings, the sum of.		200,000
This leaves the estimated expenses of the National Council for the year 1927 at		$3,758,057
Toward these expenses the Council will have from interest on its endowment funds and from the United Thank Offering of the women of the Church an amount estimated at	$702,370
The Council expects from gifts not applicable to quota and from other sources the sum of	75,000
This gives a total of income other than gifts on the quotas of		777,370
The Council therefore needs from the Dioceses to meet its estimated expenditures		$2,980,687
When making reductions in appropriations in February, 1927, the Council provided for an estimated surplus for the year of		2,656
There is thus needed from the Dioceses to balance the Budget for 1927 (Note.—This is the exact amount which the Dioceses told the Council it might expect to receive during the year.)		$2,983,343
The Dioceses have paid to December 1st		2,086,401
TO BALANCE THE BUDGET THERE MUST BE PAID IN DECEMBER		$896,942

A FAMILY PRAYER

Almighty and Everlasting God, in whom we live and move, and have our being; we, Thy needy creatures, render Thee our humble praises for all Thy mercies, and loving kindness, from our earliest being to this moment. Ever draw us closer and closer to Thyself by all Thine unceasing goodness toward us. Establish us in Thy faith and fear and love. Let Thy work appear unto Thy servants, and Thy glory to their children. Give us seeing eyes, and hearing ears, and wise and understanding hearts, that we may see the good of Thy chosen, rejoice in the gladness of Thy people, and glory with Thine inheritance. Bless us and be merciful unto us: Lift up the light of Thy countenance upon us, and give us peace, now and evermore.

Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

By Three Ships.

I send three ships a-sailing
Across the ocean sea.
Each one is laden full as full,
With gifts to you from me.

One carries loving greetings,
And wishes by the ton,
For you to have the best of health,
And happiness and fun.

One takes you Smiles and Twinkles,
And blessed, thoughtful ways,
That bring you just the best of Friends
To love you all your days.

The Third Ship takes you Wisdom
And Love that understands
The way to guide your blessed heart
And useful little hands.

When my Three Ships have anchored
Beside your heart at last,
Take what they bring, but start them back,
To me as fast as fast.

Christmas Eve.

Florence Van Fleet Lyman.

Our hill an dale and town and city lights flash out and travelers in the dusk are cheered by them; the lights of home, church, playhouse and tavern, all bidding the wayfarer welcome by their lighted windowpane, to heart-loved fireside comfort and soul-sought light of prayer and entertainment to make the mind happier, or warmth and food and rest for the night. These are the lights of the world, but far above, in the dim, silent heavens the great star of Bethlehem shone, a symbol of the light of life, and the hope of life hereafter.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"Difficulty is the very atmosphere of miracle."

Prayer is so mighty an instrument that no one ever thoroughly mastered all its Keys.—Hugh Miller.

No man has any wisdom to throw away who puts physical relaxation above soul cultivation.—Rev. Wm. Porkess.

The New Testament is the happiest, most joyous book ever penned. And yet it came out of the heart of as bitter an outward experience as was ever experienced.

For all the saints, far hidden from the strife,
Saints of the home, and ward, and healing knife,
For mother, lover, comrade, loyal wife.
Alleluia!

A spirit tremblingly responsive to the heavenly voice is the grandest gift of all. —W. L. Watkinson.

Love one another in spite of your faults; do what you can to serve each other, to lighten each other's trials and inconveniences, and burdens; above all, make the best of one another.—Dean Stanley.

Whatever problems of social difficulty clamor for solution, Christian love brings to the work at least the element of unconquerable hope.—H. Henley Hanson.

Late one fall, when visiting a lonely Labrador settlement, we found almost an absolute dearth for the winter, and every teacher gone south, with eight months of isolation ahead. This meant a terrible prospect for the people. I shall never forget the anxious meeting at night, when prayer was made for a solution of our difficulty, or the surprise with which we greeted a trading vessel two mornings later, which had, by "chance", been driven north again by the strong southerly gales.—Wilkes T. Grenfall.

Instead of being narrow and gloomy and dismal, religion is the biggest and brightest and grandest thing that can come into a man's life, transforming every power and every energy, bathing it in peace and flooding it with joy. Lay firm hold on the full consequences of the faith, and go out to the tasks of your life, strengthened by the deep power of joy.—Hugh Black.

AFTER

After Christmas. Christmas of 1927 has passed into the long procession of yesterdays—a procession extending back into the dimness before the beginning of history, beyond the limits of human knowledge, each unit of it carrying its record of human joys and woes, virtues and sins. Some of us—let us hope very, very many—look back to the day and time as completely happy and beautiful, a lovely, fragrant, memory to be cherished gratefully through life, a glowing jewel among the treasures carried in hearts. The yesterdays go back further than we know. Acts done or words spoken in those through which we have lived may, often do, go onward and forward further and more widely than our hopes or fears or imaginations may reach. Thought stirred, impressions given, impulses and emotion aroused, in a child of now may be guiding influences of potent lives sixty or seventy years hence, after those of us now of mature age are forgotten and in conditions inconceivable to us as those of the present were to people of seventy years ago.

Some of us—let us hope very, very few—have found the Christmas time disappointing. The happiness and soothing peace that should come with the season have been lacking or somehow marred or broken and there have been stings, deep and lasting or slight and transient, but hurting. And the Christmas can not be recalled, revised or remodeled or lived over. It is gone among the countless yesterdays, what was done or left undone, said or left unsaid in it to live, maybe, in the endless line of tomorrows, to be accounted for when history has closed, in the far future, hidden from us by darkness denser than that enwrapping the far past.

We can not recall this Christmas nor any of the yesterdays. All of them are gone. Today is our's. Tomorrow is our's. None of us—not the youngest and strongest—may know we will be here for the next Christmas, but whatever time is allowed to us before the inevitable call is ours to use as we will.

If our Christmas has been perfect, serene, beautiful, let us learn from it to hold close and dear the love and kindliness and charity, the expanding longing for brotherhood, the forbearance and ready forgiveness and patiently generous, gloriously brave, self-sacrifice the day commemorates. If it has been disturbed, spoiled, made a bitter and burning memory instead of a sweet and comforting one for ourselves, let us search within ourselves, with courageous honesty, to know how much of the fault has been our own. Neglect? Carelessness? Temper permitted to break beyond control when the meaning and purpose of the hallowed and holy festival should have taught control of it against any provocation? Jealousy? Vanity denied gratification of extreme and unreasonable desires? Niggard grudging? Wasteful, ostentatious or dishonest spending? Pursuit of gaieties to sodden and exhausted satiety? Unseemly revels and drunkenness to belated and vain remorse and misery? The list of sins of omission and commission, of thought and tongue and deed, that may make a Christmas miserable, that have made miserable many Christmas days, yet tormenting and humiliating memories, is interminable.

Yet the days after the Christmas are ours. Most of us who read this will be here next Christmas. All of us can learn from the Christmas through which we have passed. We can learn to bow our heads and humble our hearts and beseech the Almighty Creator, for the sake of Him whose coming to us and for us we should joyously and gratefully remember, to continue His mercy. If the time has been happy and unclouded for us, surely it behooves us to be intensely thankful and to beg that the qualities and conditions that made it so may abide with us. If it has been unhappy through sin or fault of our own, there is time and invitation for us to beg forgiveness and the strengthening to victory of purpose to overcome our own weaknesses and evil dispositions. If malice or folly or failure of others made for us trouble and pain where we hoped for joy, the surest alleviation and consolation is to ask help to forgive, as we hope to be forgiven, and to put it away from us. The season can not be profaned more grossly by any vicious misdeed done in it than by carrying from it grudges and resentments.

Devout, faithful gratitude for the gift to us and all our race to remembrance of which the day is dedicated and for such blessings and pleasures as have been bestowed on us, honest and earnest penitence for wrongs we have done, sorrow for the moments and hours of happiness that might have been, forfeited by our shortcomings or sins, sincere, ungrudging pardon for wrongs done to us and for all blunders and offenses of our weak and erring brothers and sisters of humanity, should come with the days after the Christmas. The future, be it many days or few, as the tomorrows come and pass into yesterdays, will be ours, to make fruitful and beautiful or barren and ugly, as we will, whatever this Christmas may have brought us. Those who have enjoyed the season most happily and justly, those who have been disappointed in it most bitterly, those who have misused it most vilely, may share a common hope and purpose. All may determine, with the always proffered help of the All Merciful Helper, to absorb into souls and hearts and take with them and prove by behavior through all the tomorrows to be given them, understanding of the real message of this Christmas, of all the Christmas days that have passed and all of those to come.

Alfred B. Williams.

REDEMPTION'S AVAILABLE FUTURE

Ring out the old! Ring in the new! These words may mean nothing more than the childish tiring of one game and the eager quest for a new one. But to the thoughtful the earth's annual completion of its swing around the Sun and starting afresh in its orbit brings solemn reflections.

Not Bound by the Past.

To some the past rises as Banquo's ghost did to Macbeth, darkening all the future and disturbing one's serenity of mind with anxious forebodings. Taking inventory of past achievements may lead to depression. We may cry "all our yesterdays have lighted fools the way to study death". And life may be "a walking shadow, a poor player

"That struts and frets his hour upon the stage
And then is heard no more. It is a tale
Told by an idiot full of sound and fury,
Signifying nothing".

But to the Christian hope glows like a star in the evening sky. God loves new things—"I make all things new". A new race of people is being fashioned, for by faith in Christ we are born anew. Redemption strikes the fetters from the bondage of a dead past, sets one free from the corroding power of sin, lifts from the pit and sets one to "sing unto the Lord a new song for He hath done marvelous things—with His own right hand and with His holy arm hath He gotten Himself the victory". So when the Passover feast was instituted it was a new beginning of time. God said "this month shall be unto you the beginning of months, it shall be the first month in the year to you". Redeemed persons in Christ are said to be a new creation, "old things have passed away, behold all things are become new". The resurrection came on the eighth day and the number eight signifies a new beginning. There are seven notes on the piano and the octave speaks of a new beginning. How little Christians realize the vast change wrought by our Redeemer. In 1838 an evangelist gathered 10,000 slaves on the island of Jamaica for a praise meeting for the putting into effect of the Emancipation Act. An immense coffin was prepared. They filled it with whips, branding irons, handcuffs, fetters, slave garments, and all other memorials belonging to the horrid system. At the first stroke of the midnight bell the minister shouted, "The monster is dying"! At the twelfth stroke he shouted, "The monster is dead! let us bury him". They then screwed down the coffin lid, lowered it into a twelve-foot grave and covered it up, thus burying forever out of sight the very things which so long had made human lives a hard and painful bondage. Every throat, that night, of those ten thousand liberated slaves shouted itself hoarse with the joy of freedom." Note that all our duty springs out of Redemption. I am the Lord thy God that brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage.

The Available Future.

F. W. Robertson, in one of his sermons, speaks of Jesus' words, "Sleep on now and take your rest", as referring to the irreparable past. It has gone from us—nothing can be done about it. But in His words, "Rise, let us be going", there is an available future.

"Life is real! Life is earnest!
And the grave is not its goal,
Dust thou art, to dust returnest,
Was not spoken of the soul.

In the world's broad field of battle
In the bivouac of Life,
Be not like dumb driven cattle!
Be a hero in the strife!

Let us then be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate
Still achieving, still pursuing Learn to labor and to wait."

"Forgetting the things which are behind and reaching forth unto those things which are before I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

Pilate's cry, "What I have written I have written", is echoed by all not born anew. Oh, the awful damning scarlet letter that brands itself on the sinning soul and leaves it desperate under the sentence of death. Oh, the glory of the evangel that proclaims Him who came "blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us which was contrary to us and took it out of the way, nailing it to His cross and having spoiled principalities and powers He made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in it" (Col. 2:14, 15).

Our Responsibility.

We then have a responsibility to walk in newness of life. That will not be done by good resolutions. It is praiseworthy to set before the mind rules such as Benjamin Franklin did. He set himself daily to do certain things under the headings: Temperance, Silence, Order, Resolution, Frugality, Industry, Sincerity, Justice, Moderation, Cleanliness, Tranquillity, Chastity, Humility. He began the day by asking What good shall I do today? In the evening he asked What good have I done today? He had a chart and kept tab on himself. But hear him say, "On the whole though I never arrived at the perfection I had been so ambitious of observing, but fell far short of it, yet I was by the endeavor a better and happier man than I otherwise would have been". We are told to hitch our wagon to a star. But how to get to the star is the question. Christ is the end of the law to every one that believeth. "For what the law could not do in that it was weak through the flesh God sending His own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh and for sin condemned sin in the flesh: that the righteousness of the LAW MIGHT BE FULFILLED IN US, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." Note that the law is fulfilled IN us not by us. "It is God that worketh IN us to will and to do of His good pleasure." Here is your one hope of attaining your New Year ideals. A good recipe for success for the Year is given in Joshua 1:8: "This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth; but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest observe to do according to all that is written therein; for then thou shalt make thy way PROSPEROUS, and then thou shalt have GOOD SUCCESS."

Have You a Passport to Heaven?

No one can travel abroad without a passport. One is required to go to Beulah Land. Here it is: "The blood of Jesus Christ , His Son, cleanseth us from all sin." The priest was to have blood sprinkled on his right ear, the thumb of his right hand, and the great toe of his right foot. It would seem to signify our complete consecration to Christ—hear for Christ—do for Christ—go for Christ. That will be sufficient for victory and blessing during the coming year. Claim your possessions—there is power in the blood. Do not try but TRUST.

"So live that when thy summons comes to join
The innumerable caravan that moves
To the pale realms of shade, where each shall take
His chamber in the silent halls of death,
Thou go not, like the quarry slave at night,
Scourged to his dungeon, but, sustained and soothed
By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave
Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch
About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams."

SUGGESTED BIBLE READING.

Last year the American Bible Society suggested a plan of reading their penny Gospels during January and February. The plan proved so popular that they have increased the publication of these Gospels and expect to issue 800,000 of them. The plan as suggested this year calls for the reading of Matthew in January and John in February. Reading a chapter a day will take one to the beginning of Lent.

This seems to us an excelent plan, and we hope that our readers will follow it. The penny Gospels are well printed and convenient to carry in the pocket. The Southern agency is at 218 North Adams Street, Richmond, Va.

WITH CHRIST IN SEPARATION

By the Reverend F. B. Meyer, B. A.

The Bible rings with the cry for separation. Those words, Divide! Divide! so often heard in the House of Commons compelling every man to take a side, speak through its pages, from those earliest verses which tell how God divided the light from the darkness.

This call came to Abraham, bidding him get out from country and kindred and father's house; to Moses as the bugle-note of the Exodus; to the tribe of Levi, mustering them at the gate of the camp; to the children of Israel, as they languished in Babylon, bidding them return to their fatherland; and along the resounding aisles of the New Testament Church, these words re-echoed: "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you." "Come out of her, My people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues" (2 Cor. 6:17 and Rev. 18:4).

But what is that separation to which we are called? There are many counterfeits, against which we do well to be on our guard. It is not the separation of the monk. This has ever fascinated noble minds. For like-minded men to go off together to some sequestered vale, protected from the storms that sweep across the world; to build for themselves homes and temples, and mingle their toils with holy meditation and prayer; welcoming the daybreak with matins, and greeting with vesper hymns the first couriers of the starry host: such was the dream that stirred the imagination of saintly hearts in the Middle Ages. And something like this filled the Mayflower with the Pilgrim Fathers, and peopled the Black Forest with colonies of Moravian settlers.

But such separation, however attractive, cannot be the separation of Christ. He solemnly prayed that we might not be taken out of the world; yea, He expressly sent us into the world. And what would become of it if we were all to withdraw from its life? Night without a star; a rock-bound coast without a lighthouse beam raying out into the murky gloom; a vessel drifting on the rocks without a watch on deck; a carcase corrupting in midsummer without salt! No, this cannot be the separation to which we are called.

It is not the separation of Pharisee. The Pharisees held that a man could be religious without being good. He might be full of extortion and excess, if only he washed the outside of cup and platter; full of dead men's bones, if only he appeared clean as a whitewashed sepulchre. In their judgment, therefore, impurity was not a matter of inward evil, but communicated by a touch. To be touched by a man who had not washed since eating would be sufficient to defile the stately Pharisee.

But our Lord forever broke down these unrighteous distinctions. He taught not only by speech, but by action, that impurity is not communicated by contact, but is nurtured in the heart and bred in act and speech. He did not wash after His meals; He ate with publicans and sinners; He let a fallen woman weep at his feet; He touched the bleared eye of blindness, the tied tongue of dumbness, the polluted flesh of the leper. Repeatedly we are told that He stretched forth His hand and touched.

And is not this what the world wants? It needs hand help—the touch of the King. We shall never be able to help men by simply looking on them or exhorting them; we must touch them. Those lily-white delicate jeweled hands which may turn this page must be yielded to Christ, that He may use them and work through them His miracles of mercy in our weary age. And such contact will not defile. Pitch is a disinfectant; so far from defiling, it will tend to promote our love for purity, when we dare the contact, in the name of Christ and for the welfare of a dying world.

It is not the separation of the stoic. The Puritans were not entirely free from this mistake. For them the world was a great howling wilderness; laughter and mirth signs of an unregenerate soul; their scheme of life too narrow and severe to admit of those lighter and softer passages which relieve its strain and draw out the tenderer sentiments of human hearts.

Against this, Christ's life was a perpetual protest. He mingled with wedding guests, smiled at the children as they played in the market places and called to their fellows, directed the crowds to the beauties of the flowers and the habits of the birds, noticed the sunrise hues and evening tints, and lived as a man amongst men. However severe He might be to the formalists of His time, He had ever a warm heart towards what was natural and human. Let us not forget the command, Thou shalt rejoice in every good thing which the Lord thy God giveth thee, and let us cultivate the habit of extracting joy and blessing from all the innocent and beautiful things around us.

The necessity of answering this question is really urgent. It is a pressing question. Hundreds of young Christians are asking what they should do or avoid; and in so many cases, for want of a clear principle, begin to drift; the bloom passes off the basket of summer fruit, and when once gone, can never be replaced. It is a pertinent question, especially at those seasons of the year when the dark evenings afford such abundant opportunities for the dance, the ball, the theatre and the opera. It is also a perplexing question, because good people are found on such opposite sides, and give answers, wide as the poles asunder, to the various questions with which they are plied. Some forbid the theatre, but allow the opera. Some have no objection to the children's pantomime, but are horrified at the proposal to see an ordinary play. Some would go to see Shakespearean plays, but would not go to others. Some distinguish between a dance and a ball.

What is the result? Christian ministers frequent theatres. Professors give dancing parties not far removed from balls. Funds for religious purposes are raised by private theatricals. Our young people are perpetually loosening the restraints by which they are held, pressing outwards the fences which divide them from the world, taking in new lengths of territory and fretting against restraint.

Are there no self-acting principles, so that each individual soul may decide for itself these difficult, doubtful and perilous problems which are so incessantly cropping up in all lives, either in one form or another? There are, and the following are surely amongst them: and, like the spear of the seraph Ithuriel, will indicate by a touch the evil that may lurk under innocent appearances:

(1) Beware of anything which is consistent with your relationship to the Lord Jesus. What is that relationship? And, of course, we are dealing here with the case of those who are His, or who are desirous of being identified with Him, both here and hereafter.

We are His servants; bought by His blood, sworn to loyal allegiance. Is it quite consistent, then, to be mingling with the amusements and gaieties of the world, which is of the same spirit today as when it cast Him out of its camp and crucified Him? It has an ugly look about it when loyal soldiers fraternize in the carousals of rebels.

We are His members; bone of His bone, flesh of His flesh, whom He nourishes and cherishes. Our Head is already passed through the grave on to resurrection-ground, where He is gathering round Him His own—His kindred. Is it not incongruous for the Head to be on one side of the grave and the members on the other? Is it not altogether unbecoming to pretend to be one with Him in His risen glory, whilst we are practically as close as we dare in our contact with the world which He has left?

We are His Bride; He, the Heavenly Bridegroom, is one with us in a union which has no analogy, save that of wedlock, where heart locks with heart. Is it consistent with fidelity to Him for us to dally with the world, whose hands were embued with His blood? What did the people of Scotland think of the familiarities of marriage between Mary, Queen of Scots, and Bothwell, the murderer of her first husband, Darnley?

Surely the Cross, with outstretched arms, bars the bridge between us and the world; and we may cry with the Apostle, "Far be it from me to glory, save in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, through which the world has been crucified unto me, and I unto the world."

Whenever, then, there is any doubt as to whether it be right to go to this place or that, bring the question beneath the light that streams from the Cross and from the Throne; clear your heart and mind of all selfish aims and thoughts of what others may do or say; let your eye be single to discern the will of the Lord; ask what He would have you to do; and before long the difficulties will roll up as quickly and noiselessly as the mists which fill the mountain valleys before the touch of the summer sun; your whole body will be full of light; you will even lose your taste for the things which once you loved; and in the new-found ecstacy of the Living Water, welling up in your heart, you will be prepared to leave behind the waterpot on which you had been relying as the source of your life.

(2) Beware of anything which the world itself would deem inconsistent. Though the world is not religious in our sense ,yet it has a very keen appreciation of true Christianity, and a very high ideal of what Christians should be. And we may well arrest our steps when we are met with a surprised interrogation—"What! are you here? We didn't expect to see you!" The very fuss which is made over us when we step over the line may well make us pause and ask whether we have not done something to forfeit the smile and "Well done" of Jesus.

(3) Beware of anything which would injure some weaker conscience. This is one of the most important considerations in Christian living. "All things are lawful to me, but all things are not expedient." And why are they not expedient? It is inexpedient to do things which may be harmless enough in themselves, and which you may feel able to do with impunity, if in doing them you lead others to do them also, not because they feel at ease, but simply because they are emboldened by your example, regarding you as further advanced than themselves in the Christian life, and therefore a trustworthy guide. Estimate every action, not only as it is in itself, but as it is likely to be in its influence on others, lest you break down wholesome barriers, and place them in scenes of temptation which, however harmless to yourself, are perilous in the extreme to them. We have no right to lead our young children up perilous passes, where we may clamber with clear head and nimble foot, but where their inexperienced steps may slide into the abyss.

(4) Beware of scenes and companionships which dull your spiritual life. Who is there that does not long for a life on fire? But how can we possibly look for such a thing if we are persistently exposing ourselves to influences which choke and repress it and damp it down? There are some scenes which seem incompatible with earnest prayer and Bible study, ere we retire to rest; which lower the inner temperature, which leave an ill-flavour in the mouth; which poison the young life, as the noxious gas-fumes poison the life of flowers and plants. From all such scenes we do well to refrain our feet.

(5) Beware of any society in which you feel compelled to put a bushel over your testimony. We must shine as lights in the world. And the most necessary condition in a lighthouse lamp is its permanence. If it shines at one time and is hidden at another, now flashing afar over the dark, seething waves, and then standing sombre and obscure on the beetling cliffs, of what use is it? It is worse than useless. And if we are to be of any real use in this world, our testimony for Jesus must be maintained in season and out of season, in storm and sunshine, always and everywhere. But if, before going into any scene or fellowship, you have to remind yourself that you must not touch on any of those subjects which are dearest to your soul, you may well fear lest you are trespassing on forbidden ground. Go nowhere that you cannot take Jesus with you, and ask His blessing before going. "Do all to the glory of God."

All this will involve a hard fight, persecution and misunderstanding. It is thus, however, that we prove our lineage with the noble martyr-spirits of the past. See that young girl, in the days of Diocletian, beautiful and richly dressed; standing before the altar, with the judge on the one side, her lover on the other, her companions grouped around. If she will but throw a few grains of incense on the brazier she shall be spared from cruel death and given back to love and friends and life. But not a grain is cast upon the expectant flames, and she is ruthlessly led off to die for Him whom she loves better than all. Was she not consistent? Would you not have done the same? Then do the same now, and dare to be consistent to your lover, Christ.

Sometimes we may be placed in such a position that we have no alternative than to go into scenes which, for ourselves, we would not choose. For instance, when the worldly mother of a Christian girl insists on her accompanying her into society, where there is nothing positively sinful, but much that is light and thoughtless, it would evidently be her duty to go. You may ask to be excused, but if your plea is not allowed, you must go, unless conscience positively forbids, and Christ will go with you, keeping your heart.

There are many compensations. This is the only safe course. The world is so attractive, and so appeals to our weaknesses, that if we once launch upon its waters they will insensibly sweep us toward the rush of the whirlpool, and we shall go down into the deep, dark abyss. It is the only strong course. He who would lift me must stand above me. Who did most for Sodom: Lot, who went down into it and sat in the gate, or Abraham, who got up early to the place where he stood before the Lord? The old heathen games were swept off the world, not because the early Christians went to them, but because they stopped away. The brutal sports of the last century fled away, not because the Methodists patronized them, but because they abstained from them. And the moral pests of modern society will never succumb until good people withdraw both their patronage and support. This is the only blessed course, because God's promise of being a Father and of receiving us is entirely dependent on our complying with His conditions. It is when father and mother forsake that the Lord gathers us; when the synagogue casts us out that Jesus finds us; when heart and flesh fail that He is the strength of our heart and our portion forever.

Dare to go outside the camp, at the risk of being counted singular and unfriendly! Let the world treat you as it did your Lord. Why should the servant be fawned on and flattered where the Master was crucified as a felon? Lie in His grave, and thus you shall know the joys of His Easter life, the sweetness of His love, and the closeness of His friendship, which would compensate for a thousand deaths. To know the King you must share His exile.

Gather ye, gather ye, out to the lone Cave of Adullam, and around the standard of the exiled Prince; and when He comes again in triumph to be crowned with the diadem of universal empire ye shall appear in His train and by His side, confessed and acknowledged as those of whom He has no reason to be ashamed.

THE HOLY SPIRIT AND THE NEW DAY

By Kenneth Mackenzie

NO pursuit, however romantic, has the adventurous elements of vital Christian experience. It stands not in need of the importation of fanciful speculation, bristling novelties, challenging interrogations. It is based upon the old faith of our fathers, despite the charge of "must and mold", by which it is arraigned before the court of modern thinking. For whatever genuine, heaven-born faith exists, it must find and possess fresh acquisition and ultimate triumph.

The new life of the regenerated child of God discovers in Him and His precious dealings the sweet mystery of the worth-whileness of living, being and doing. For to him, every day is a new day. He stands in a new covenant, which constantly unfolds its divine provisions (Heb. 9: 15; he walks in a new way (Heb. 10:20); he possesses a new spirit (Rom. 7:6); he is a new creation (2 Cor. 5:17) and expresses a new life (Rom. 6:4); he bears a new name before God (Rev. 2:17); he is exuberantly expectant of new mercies (Lam. 3:23), for he is a new man in Christ (Eph. 4:24) and sings the new song (Ps. 40:3) in anticipation of the grand chorus which will eventually be his to engage in (Rev. 5:9, 10).

And this will not be signalized by strenuous effort. If we are in the world of spiritual newness (2 Cor. 5:17), our works will be God's working in us to will and to do of His good pleasure (Phil. 2:13), and we shall be in line for doing the things well pleasing in His sight (Heb. 13:20, 21). The while, we stand expectant of all that He will accomplish in our behalf, because we know the power of resting in Him (Ps. 37:7; 62:1, 2, 5; Isa. 26:4; 30:7).

Now, this is not bondage, nor is it the "laziness of faith", veritable slaves are they who seeking, striving, struggling, live a life of fuss and fret, of self-generated plans and purposings. For this divinely provided relief from carking care and its resultant calamities is not an implication of abandonment to indifference. The rather it suggests an intelligent cooperation with God in fulfilling life's highest ideality and heart satisfaction. Anything that makes our loving Lord necessary to us, even to the minutest detail, is to be cherished, sought for and treasured. It was this deep secret that burned in the heart of Jesus as looking into faces, seared with the furrows of solicitude, He urged, "Take no anxious thought. . . Your heavenly Father knoweth" (Matt. 6:25-34). If any one ever possessed competence to interpret life from its truest perspective, it was He, who not only knew, but lived in God His Father, for the complete fulfillment of His Father's will (John 4:34; 6:38; 8:29). Nor was this attitude, predicated of Him centuries ere He came in the flesh (Ps. 40:7, 8), a desperate surrender to the inevitable fate to which He felt Himself sentenced. It was to Him the really normal life; the only vibrating life of potency. He was undismayed in peril, until the Father's program for Him was scheduled to the hour (Luke 4:28-30; 22: 53; John 7:6-8). Aye, He would not be impatient in hunger, while He awaited His Father's provision for Him through the angelic ministry (Matt. 4:1-11); He could sleep innocently during the tempest, calmly reposing in His Father's protection (Luke 8:22-25); and at the end so buoyant with expectancy was He that His very death was a triumph (Heb. 12:1, 2). And we note that this freedom from all self-interest provided Him the release which empowered Him to sincerely pray for others (Luke 23:34).

We reverently behold that this habit of life, not for our imitation, but as the pledge of our own enabling, was the expression of the Holy Spirit, who brought Him into His earthly tabernacle, and dominated Him at every turn of His matchless life. And we should be far from our inherited prerogatives if we argue that He was so much beyond us that what was vital to Him can never be so to us. The very reverse is His ideal for us. To this very end, He designed the coming of the Spirit. We cannot be one with Him, and His Father and ours, unless all that was true of Him in the experience of God's gracious care becomes true of us (John 17:21, 22). The world will know that God sent Him, if our lives are like His. Shall we not confess with shame that the reason why the world sees so little in us to commend our Lord to it, is this very susceptibility to separate ourselves from Him in this sphere of experience?

So a new year breaks upon us. We may lightly make our usual resolutions, laughingly confessing that they are only to be broken. Again we may apprehend dark days, hot fires, deep waters, bereavements, losses, defeats and failures. We may with Mohammedan stoicism, forecast the approaching months with the "Kismet" of fatality. But God forbid that those "who profess and call themselves Christians" should so belittle their covenant privileges and descend to the level of unbelievers. For, as we have noted, every day is a new day, fair and fresh from His hand, upon which He yearns to write the strong story of His loving kindness, no matter what the circumstances. Confessedly, we have crossed more bridges of our own constructing than God ever thought of asking us to face. The calamities we have anticipated and failed to mature would fill a life many times the length of our own. And all for want of what we may know is His mind for us.

When we urge that our Lord meant we should have the same quiet restfulness in God that He exercised, He gave to us the lives of virile men, flesh and blood, of like passions with us, and weaknesses, too. The writing of their experiences, as shown by their own confessions, emboldens us to seize the boon presented to us and make vital the realization of the truth we are discussing. A Hamlet might solliloquize, "Whether it is nobler in the mind, to suffer the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune; or to take arms against a sea of troubles, and by opposing, end them"? But a St. Paul could confess that though he died daily (1 Cor. 15:31), yet his inner man was renewed (2 Cor. 4:16); for that he prayed in behalf of his friends (Eph. 3:14-21). And every believer has the authority to make this provision his own. If we are tempted to think hard of our situation, let us be warmed in confidence by the record of this man (2 Cor. 2:14; $:7-10; 6: 4-10; 12:9, 10; Rom. 8:35-39; Phil. 4:11-13; 2 Tim. 1:12). And impatient, impulsive, impetuous Peter becomes a shining testimony of the power of the Holy Spirit to transfigure an unseemly vessel into one of transcendent winsomeness. For what he enjoins upon others, he first experiences in his own life (1 Peter 1:6-9; 2:19-25; 3:8-17; 4:12-14; 5: 5-7).

Therefore, we may contend that if Christ dwells in us the hope of glory (Col. 1:27); if our lives are hid with Christ in God (Col. 3:3); if we look for the guidance and infilling of the Holy Spirit (Eph. 5:18), as others before us have known that blessed estate, there shall not lack to us the charm of spiritual adventure and our lives may become a wonderful romance, written by the divine hand upon the imperishable tablets of our surrendered hearts.

Thus every good thing that comes to us will bear the imprimatur of His loving touch (Matt. 5:45; James 1:17); we may interpret every trial as the occasion for jubilantly waiting to see what He will do (Ex. 14:13; 2 Chron. 20: 17); we may translate every inexplicable incident into the realm of His outworking for good (Rom. 8:28); we may exultingly claim the promise, "Be anxious for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God", and thus realize the faithful guarding of the peace of God that passeth all understanding (Phil. 4:6, 7). The things we may have dreaded will no longer affright us; for He will measure out to us that meed of kindness we shall so much require, the degree of testing He sees we shall be able to bear; and looking closely into our lives as does the refiner of silver on the face of the molten metal (Mal. 3:3), when He sees Himself, the process of purification will be completed. We shall grow to appraise our true relation to Him as dear children (Eph. 5:1), and accept the affectionate cherishing which He has for all who are in the Son of His love (Eph. 1:6; Col. 1:13). And as the long drawn shadows of the closing day dim the luster of our glorious past, we shall sing with Rutherford:

"And when I'm to die, 'Receive me', I'll cry;
For Jesus hath loved me (I cannot tell why).
This one thing I find, we two are so joined,
He'll not be in glory and leave me behind."

The while, let us see Him in His Word and providences, blending with a wealth of personal experience, increasing more and more (2 Cor. 3:18), until we shall rest as a babe in His tender arms, gloriously anticipating our exodus or our translation as He shall will (2 Tim. 4:7, 8; 1 Thess. 4:13-18), sleeping, if needs be, to waken with the sight of His face to gladden our wondering eyesight (Ps. 17:15).

Shall we dedicate ourselves for this year to the reception of this marvelous provision and infect other lives with the contagion of our joy and gladness in the majesty of our calling, and the potentiality of our resources in Him?

OUR CHURCH STATISTICS.

Thomas Semmes.

Estimates of the number of members in any Church or in any of the larger divisions of the Church can only be approximate. Accuracy is impossible from the nature of the situation. That admirable Year Book of the Episcopal Church, "The Living Church Annual", in its editorial for 1928 makes this very clear, but at the same time presents some very interesting figures for consideration.

The number of baptized persons in the whole Church is estimated at near 1,800,000. This estimate is very carefully made, based on actual reports from a majority of the parishes. We think this quite conservative. The number of communicants for 1927 is reported as 1,218,941, which is about 18,000 over 1926, but the number of persons confirmed during the year shows a slight decrease and the number of baptisms for the year shows a more serious decrease of over 4,000. The Church Schools (Sunday) number 495,894 pupils and 58,462 teachers, there being a small increase in both. The clergy also show an increase of 48, the total reaching 6,207. This number shows how small a percentage of the clergy voted on the prohibition question recently, not quite twenty per cent.

The editorial points out some important facts in connection with the membership of the Church. The constant movement of population and the indifference of many members are creating a very large body of unattached people and loss of our membership to other churches. Judging from our knowledge of the City of Richmond for many years, our Church has become a "feeder" to our sister churches. At the same time it may be remembered that many members of other churches come into our confirmation classes. Divided households and mixed marriages cause many changes in membership. A serious cause of loss to us is the rapid increase of suburban churches of other denominations catching the drift of our membership on account of proximity.

On the whole the report for 1927 is above the average and rather encouraging. There is much room for improvement. Any real advance must come in renewed and sustained efforts of the clergy, concentrating on parish and Sunday-school work and in arousing the conscience of communicants to the lay duty of prayer and service in building the Church through personal sacrifice.

IS THERE A SANTA CLAUS?

Little Virginia O'Hanlon, perplexed by this question, wrote to the editor of the New York Sun. The following editorial from the pen of Francis P. Church answered the question for all time:

"Yes, Virginia, there is a Santa Claus. He exists as certainly as love and generosity and devotion exist, and you know that they abound and give to your life its highest beauty and joy. Alas! how dreary would be the world if there were no Santa Claus! It would be as dreary as if there were no Virginias. There would be no childlike faith then, no poetry, no romance to make tolerable this existence. We should have no enjoyment, except in sense and sight. The eternal light with which childhood fills the world would be extinguished. Not believe in Santa Claus! You might as well not believe in fairies! You might get your papa to hire men to watch in all the chimneys on Christmas Eve to catch Santa Claus, but even if they did not see Santa Claus coming down, what would that prove? Nobody sees Santa Claus, but that is no sign that there is no Santa Claus. The most real things in the world are those that neither children nor men can see. Did you ever see fairies dancing on the lawn? Of course not, but that's no proof that they are not there. Nobody can coiceive or imagine all the wonders there are unseen and unseeable in the world.

You tear apart the baby's rattel to see what makes the noise inside, but there is a veil covering the unseen world which not the strongest man, nor even the united strength of all the strongest men that ever lived, could tear apart. Only faith, fancy, poetry, love, romance, can push aside that curtain and view and picture the supernal beauty and glory beyond. Is it all real? Ah, Virginia, in all this world there is nothing else real and abiding.

No Santa Claus! Thank God! he lives, and he lives forever. A thousand years from now, Virginia, nay, ten times ten thousand years from now, he will continue to make glad the heart of childhood.

PLAIN BIBLE STUDIES

Prepared by J. T. Bougher.

Note: In this new series of studies effort will be made to set forth in brief form wondrous things that God would have us know as told in His own eternal words.

Lesson No. 15: The Holy Spirit.
(Read Romans, Chapters 7 and 8.)

In our previous study we considered the works and functioning power of the Holy Spirit, and in our present lesson we will consider the principal names of his wonderful third Person of the Trinity, or triune God. As is the case with the many titles of the Son of God, each name of the Holy Spirit also has its special significance.

1. The Spirit—A glimpse of His life-giving power. "Born of the Spirit."—Jno. 3:6-8.

2. Holy Spirit—"All may receive the Spirit. "Shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?"—Luke 11:13.

3. Comforter—To comfort and sustain the believer. "I will pray the Father, and He shall give you another Comforter."—Jno. 14:16.

4. Spirit of God—Emphasizing the Divine nature. "The Spirit of God dwelleth within you."—1 Cor. 3:16.

5. Spirit of the Lord—(Jehovah) Involving promises to Israel. "The Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him."—Isa. 11:2.

6. Spirit of the Living God—The inward workings. "Written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God * * * in the heart."—2 Cor. 3:3.

7. Spirit of Jesus Christ—To make like Christ. "The supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ."—Phil.

8. Spirit of Burning—His searching and illuminating power. "Purged * * * by judgment and Spirit of burning."—Isa. 4:4.

9. Spirit of Truth—Guarding against error. "When the Spirit of truth is come, He will guide you."—Jno. 16:13.

10. Spirit of Holiness—Reminding of His holy character. "With power, according to the Spirit of holiness."—Rom. 1:4.

11. Spirit of Life—His redemptive power. "The Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death."—Rom. 8:2.

12. Spirit of Grace—Bestowing unmerited favor. "Hath done despite Spirit of Grace."—Heb. 10:29.

13. Spirit of Glory—Granting happiness, even under reproach. "For the Spirit of Glory and of God resteth upon you."—1 Pet. 4:14.

14. Eternal Spirit—The sacrificial, mending love. "Christ, who through the Eternal Spirit offered Himself."—Heb. 9:14.

From the above it will be seen that the blessed Holy Spirit is more than a mere influence. In the "Old Testament Age" the Spirit was manifested through chosen individuals. In this present church age the Spirit comes to dwell within every believer, imparting eternal life, we thereby becoming children of God and joint heirs with Christ, and with the present high privilege of being fellow-helpers and co-laborers with God.—1 Cor. 3:9; 2 Cor. 5:20.

The condition for the Spirit-filled life is sincere surrender to God.—Rom. 6:13—12:1. The Spirit ever exalts the Lord Jesus, hence when the believer is so surrendered and indwelt, he may truly acclaim with joy, "I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live: yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave Himself for me."—Gal. 2:20.

What a holy privilege, as we occupy for a little time, these "houses of our earthly pilgrimage".

CYPRIAN'S TESTIMONY TO THE SCRIPTURES

Cyprian, the famous Bishop of Carthage, suffered death as a martyr for the faith during the Valerian persecution of 258 A. D.

He was born of wealthy and distinguished heathen parents. Rather late in life, through the ministry of an obscure preacher, he was converted to the Christian faith. Immediately he gave to charitable purposes the greater part of his ample fortune, reserving only enough to sustain him in the simple and austere life to which he gave himself. Taking orders in the Church, he soon became famous as a preacher throughout North Africa.

When it became necessary to elect a Bishop for Carthage, the populace demanded Cyprian. The clergy were reluctant to choose a man of such austere manners and of such known insistence upon piety and holy walk and conversation in the ministry of the Word. They were overborne by the earnestness and indeed vehemence of the people. And so in 248 A. D. clergy and people of Carthage proclaimed Cyprian their Bishop.

During the Decian persecution of 250 and 251, in which multitudes of Christians suffered death and torture, Cyprian, acting on the advice of his chief advisors and depending upon Matt. 10:23, went into hiding and so saved his life. This act, wise though it was and justified by the need that the Church had of his counsels, resulted in much trouble to Cyprian and involved him in much controversy with the many self-righteous "Confessors", as they were called, that is, the men who had suffered persecution and stood firm during the harrying of Christians. In all of his controversies, whether with his own people or with Stephen, the Bishop of Rome, Cyprian insists upon Holy Scripture as the final and decisive arbiter of all conflicts and questions.

When tradition was pleaded against him, he wrote as follows:

"Whence is the tradition you refer to? Does it descend from dominical and evangelical testimony (i. e., from the testimony of the Lord and of the Gospels)? Does it come from the commands and epistles of the apostles? For God declares that those things are to be done which are written. If, then, a matter is either commanded in the Gospel or contained in the Epistles or Acts of the Apostles . . . let it be observed as a divine and holy tradition. . . . It is obstinancy and presumptive to prefer a human tradition to the divine appointment, and not to perceive that God is indignant and angry as often as human tradition annuls or neglects divine precepts. Custom without truth is merely old error. Wherefore, leaving error, let us follow truth."

Further, he says: "If Christ only is to be attended to, we ought not to regard what any one of our predecessors thought was to be done; but what He who preceded all, Christ, did. For we must not follow the customs of men, but the truth of God. So let us send letters to our colleagues that the evangelical law and the dominical tradition may be everywhere observed, and that departure not be made from that which Christ both thought and did."

It is clear from this that Cyprian took Holy Scripture and especially what he calls the evangelical and dominical and apostolic tradition, by which names he means the Gospels and the Epistles of the Apostles, as the authoritative guide in belief and practice.

He has been quoted as advocating the authority of "tradition" in the sense of some report of apostolic teaching outside of the New Testament, and supplementary to it. But it is clear that by tradition he meant nothing else than what is contained in the Scriptures. Dominical tradition is to him the teaching of the Lord; evangelical tradition is the written records of the Gospels. Apostolical tradition is the teaching of the Epistles and other New Testament writings.

Cyprian was condemned after some hesitation by the Roman authorities under the Emperor Valerian, 258 A. D. Multitudes witnessed his martyrdom by beheading, and his submission yet courageous surrender to his sentence strengthened the whole African Church.

TRUMPETS OF GOD.

By Carter Wormeley.

Trumpets of God, o'er land and sea,
Again set free your clarion call,
That the whole earth may hail the birth
Of Him who is the Lord of all.

Trumpets of God, from throats of gold,
As once of old, again proclaim
The hallowed graciousness of Christ,
The spotless splendor of His name.

Tonight, afar, is seen the star
Which burned o'er Judea's sacred sod,
What time was born on Christmas morn
The Prince of Peace, the Son of God.

JEWS AND CHRISTIANS.

The caption is the captivating name of a new magazine—new in age, character and purpose. Few of us realize that we have in the United States more than 3,000,000 Jews, nearly half of them in New York City. Zebulon B. Vance, North Carolina mountaineer, twice governor and thrice United States Senator from his state, in a lecture famous thirty-five years ago on "The Scattered Nation", compared the Jewish race poetically to the Gulf Stream, a great and wonderful river of humanity flowing through the ocean of mankind, always part of it but distinct from it. When the lecture was being delivered a comparatively mild but nevertheless stinging persecution of Jews was in progress in this country, shown most prominently by exclusion of them from many of the hotels. Vance denounced this with eloquent invective. About that time, possibly partly a consequence of the little anti-Jewish crusade, a new factor came in—the Jewish anarchist, communist, destroying criminal. While Shakespeare had drawn Shylock and Dickens his Fagin, in "Oliver Twist", in contrast to his Riah of "Our Mutual Friend", Vance said in all his long experience and observation, he never had known but one American Jew guilty of offense beyond the grade of misdemeanor. He would be compelled to withdraw assertion if he were living now, for Jewish names are thick on the criminal records of the great cities. Doubtless for that reason, the first number of "Jews and Christians" is "Anti-Bolshevik number", and its most impressive article is by its editor, Mr. B. A. M. Schapiro, director of the Hebrew-Christian Publication Society, 405 Bible House, New York City. This is addressed "To My People", and preceded by the verse from Isaiah, "Cry aloud, spare not, lift up the voice like a trumpet and declare unto my people their transgressions and to the house of Jacob their sins". The injunction is obeyed faithfully. With unsparing bluntness and incisiveness, but with kindly paternal tone, Mr. Schapiro tells his people the mistakes and sins of acts, methods and manners into which they have strayed or been betrayed.

Like Governor Vance in the nineties of last century, most of us in the average American community know the Jew as a good citizen, peaceful and orderly when poor, useful and public-spirited as he wins wealth and place, assimilated with his surroundings in everything but religion, usually voting for conservatism and honesty, almost invariably charitable, regardless of race or belief, frequently a generous contributor to support of churches he never enters except for the funerals of friends or lodge brothers. Yet there are in the country three types of Jew —the widely distributed men and women familiar in our business and social life; the smaller class of rigidly orthodox in their own self-made ghettoes, wherein through blocks all signs are in Yiddish or Hebrew, all married women wear wigs and men beards, contact with Christians is avoided as far as is possible, the old rituals and rules are observed to the utmost conditions permit; the yet smaller class renouncing and deriding all religions and faiths and obligation to law. Some of these last were busy proclaiming from soap boxes through New York City what we now call Bolshevism twenty years before the Russian Czar was dethroned.

Presumably there is little hope for any Christian influence to reach into any improvised ghetto. Of the 1,500,000 Jews in New York City, however, there is synagogue room for but 45,000 and presumably the others of the million and a half are more or less religiously adrift The Hebrew-Christian Publication Society doubtless is intended to reach these and those like them scattered over the continent, many of them, it is said, eager to believe that the hoped-for Messiah really has come, if their consciences and minds can be persuaded, and to warn and deter the dangerous and disgraceful thousands misled by the diligent apostles of violence and enemies of society and the religion on which it is established.

For all who are interested in the tremendous question of the future of the marvelous Jewish race and its relations with Christianity and the progress of humanity the magazine is invaluable, invaluably instructive and interesting. The first number contains twenty-three strangely, but attractively, assorted articles from sixteen contributors, including bishops, clergymen of different denominations and Jews. There is an appreciative, sympathetic tribute to the memory of Bishop Brown, of Virginia, with a handsome portrait. The magazine has character, purpose, meaning, distinctively its own, a fascinating mixture of oriental and occidental, ancient and new. It will be issued quarterly, the title page says, "If funds permit". The price is fifty cents a copy.

It would be unjust to close the notice without expression of the admiration all writers must feel for the evidence of Mr. Schapiro's intense, patient, devoted toil visible on every one of the ninety-six pages. Obviously, he is a tireless worker. Not only has he prepared and edited and issued the magazine and a vast mass of other appeal to Jew and Christian, but he has translated and published, as a handsome book, a literary revelation in "The Shepherd Prince", a beautiful and beautifully told love story of Judea in the time of King Ahaz and Isaiah, written by Abraham Mapu, Jew of Russia, in Hebrew, more than seventy years ago. An introduction by Professor Wilson, professor of Semitic languages in Princeton University, certifies to the wonderful purity and fidelity of the translation, the precision with which the meaning and spirit of the Hebrew diction have been wrought into delightful English.

Alfred B. Williams.

CHRISTIANITY, PAST AND PRESENT: By Charles Guignebert. The Macmillan Company, New York.

The author of this five hundred page, octavo volume, is Professor of the History of Christianity in the University of Paris. It is a very able book from the standpoint of the scientist. Anatole France writes on the fly leaf: "I am not concerned about knowing whether what you have seen gives you pleasure; it is enough for me that it should be the truth. Science does not trouble about pleasing or displeasing; she is inhuman. It is not science, but poetry, that charms and comforts, and that is why poetry is more necessary than science."

But from any view point the book is a storehouse of painstaking study of nearly two thousand years of the slow, painful progress of the religion the world at large calls Christianity. What an awful, sordid, selfish, debased, inconsistent and unnatural phenomenon some of its adherents and leaders have made of it! Looking at it as a purely human development to be scientifically studied the author says: "No doubt it is a law of human mentality, by whose means religions are born, live and die, that though in certain respects the religious phenomenon may be different in itself, and perhaps, too, may raise itself from age to age towards an unconscious ideal of which some believe they have obtained a glimpse, yet it is really the same cycle that is being everlastingly developed and consummated, and then beginning once more."

We cannot blame the man of science as he looks over the history of human progress in religion. It is really, in many of its worldly aspects, a most appalling sight, and yet through all the murk and mire we are getting higher and heavenward and through the ages shining grains of human salt have appeared and bright human lights have been seen.

The author points out the difficulty of defining "religion", and the need for insisting on an analysis of positive religions. He tells why the history of Christianity is not more advanced and how Christianity as a whole appears to the historian.

The utter break down of the scientific method of treatment of the New Testament, the person of Jesus, the motives and intelligence of the disciples after the resurrection, and the true nature of the Kingdom of God, is shown in part one in which the author discusses Jesus' initiative and His failure to present His mission in a way convincing to either the people, priesthood or the scribes. The result, which he calls failure, we preach and teach, was the glory of Christ and the one only way by which the world might be saved from sin and death. The only way the world has ever found to win a rebellious and sinful heart is the way of love, such love as was shown in the sacrifice of the cross. But science does not recognize this and, therefore, misses the truth it seeks to discover.

The treatment of St. Paul follows the same method. His intellectual education, his temperament, the elements of his teaching are all put under the cold light of scientific investigation. The result again misses the exact truth. Other great scholars and some modern scientists have examined the same material and reached opposite conclusions. Yet the author's manifest sincerity of purpose and his great erudition command our respect.

But after getting away from New Testament times, the work of St. Paul and the Hellenistic influences in establishing the early Church the author is at his best in tracing its progress and the growth of theology and the papacy through the middle ages. Here his profound learning and intellectual grasp of the problems met with, the cause and purpose of the great councils of the Church, together with the decisions they reached, are well worthy of close study. Differing viewpoints often help us to reach the truth.

The author's examination into the rise of the Jesuits and his grasp of the problems surrounding the papacy causing the assembling of the Ecumenical Council of Trent, with its long-drawn-out meetings for nearly twenty years, is another evidence of his orderly mind and painstaking care in his selection of material. His estimate of the Society of Jesus and its action in the Council, combatting the influence of the reformers is, we believe, one of the best parts of the book.

The book is a notable one. It is intended for scholars and readers of liberal minds.

MAGPIE LANE: By Nancy Byrd Turner. Harcourt, Brace and Company. $1.60.

In this little volume of children's poems Miss Nancy Byrd Turner, the laureate of childhood, and "one of our own", brings into play all her delicate fancy and inerrant sense of rhythm. From Linda Lou, who was "almost shocking" (but not quite!) to the fairy who lost her dimple, we are held captive by a succession of miniature tragedies, with a smile in every one. The silhouettes by Miss Decie Merwin are as charming as the poems, seeming almost to give wings to the elves of Miss Turner's verse.

SOME LAST HOUR REFLECTIONS. By Arthur W. Ware. Published by Marshall Brothers, London. Price 1 shilling.

This booklet is of absorbing interest to all who love the appearing of the blessed Son of God. The author traces the logical development of events predicted by Dr. Guinness in his book, "Light for the Last Days", published some forty-nine years ago. The latter's prophetic interpretations have been wonderfully confirmed, and in the light of the happenings incident to the World War in Palestine and recent development in Rome, one shares the author's conviction that we are in the last days. Chronological and prophetic periods are presented clearly and with fascinating interest. One at least is strongly inclined to accept the year-day theory of interpreting David's chronology. At the same time the booklet, while interesting and helpful, seems to us scarcely worthy of unqualified commendation because of its setting of dates for the coming of Christ. But while we may not agree with his effort to prove that Christ will return in 1934, the book is well named and will move one to solemn reflections in view of the converging of many prophecies on the present period as being that of the last days.

THE CATHOLIC PARTY.

Mr. Editor:

By a gradual process, and as the result of enlightenment of the people in the pew, through the "Southern Churchman", "The Chronicle" and various Diocesan papers, they are becoming aroused to the objects and purposes of the "Catholic" or (Romanizing) party in the Church. It was for this reason that the statement made at the recent "Catholic Congress", that the aim of that party is to bring about union of the Protestant Episcopal Church with that of Rome, came as no surprise. It was this party which introduced into the last General Convention the proposal to drop—discard—the Articles of Religion, and which proposal will be before that body in October, 1928, for final action. The reason for this "Catholic" move will be apparent from a perusal of Articles 19, 22, 25, 28 and 31.

There have been some striking developments as the conflict waged by this incongruous "Catholic" (or "Back to Rome") element in the Church has progressed, in its effort to destroy the priceless heritage of the Protestant Reformation and introduce into the Church the Mass, Transubstantiation (or the so-called miraculous change of the Communion elements into the actual Body and Blood of Our Lord), Reservation and Adoration of the Sacrament, Invocation of the Virgin Mary and of the Saints, Worship of Images and Relics (such as the supposed hair from the beard of the "Sainted Martyr, King Charles I of England" not so long ago carried in a procession at St. Andrews, Tenn.), Purgatory, Penance, Auricular Confession, use of the Rosary, Holy Water, etc.

The first phase of this conflict which challenges our attention is the failure of Diocesan authorities to comply with the constitutional requirement that knowledge of all proposed changes in the Prayer Book or Articles of Religion shall be disseminated among the people of the Church before adoption.

Article X of the Constitution provides, in part:

"No alternation thereof (Prayer Book or Articles of Religion) or addition thereto shall be made unless the same shall be first proposed in one triennial meeting of the General Convention, and by a resolve thereof sent within six months to the Secretary of every Diocese, to be made known to the Diocesan Convention at its next meeting, and be adopted by the General Convention at its next succeeding triennial meeting."

So far as the writer is able to learn, this plain and unmistakable provision of the Constitution has not been complied with in but a very few Dioceses, probably not half a dozen.

Why this requirement that all such proposed changes shall be made known to every Diocesan Convention "at its next meeting" after receipt of the same from the Secretary of the General Convention? Obviously, in order that delegates to the Diocesan Convention shall return to their respective parishes, inform the people of the nature of the suggested change and thus enable members of the Church to express their wishes in the election of delegates to the following Diocesan Convention, which, in turn, elects representatives to the General Convention which is to act upon the proposed chagne.

As the result of this failure to advise the membership of the Church of this radical legislation about to come before the General Convention, it is safe to say that not 10 per cent of the people are even yet aware of it.

Why this omission to inform the laity of the Church, as its fundamental law requires, of this move to so completely alter as to destroy the Protestant Episcopal Church as our forefathers established it?

Can it be possible that bishops and clergy are either afraid or unwilling to tell the people of the Church candidly and frankly that it is now proposed to abrogate—wipe out—its Protestant declaration of faith?

Is it right that any such vital change in the doctrine of the Church should be acted upon by the General Convention without full knowledge on the part of the laity and an opportunity afforded them to indicate their desires, when the very constitutional law of their Church demands that they shall be so informed?

Is it fair?

These are solemn questions which address themselves now to the serious consideration of every Protestant Episcopalian and cry aloud for an answer.

If any such enactment as this is put through the General Convention without the full knowledge and consent of its people, can it do otherwise than provoke indignation and resentment when it becomes generally known? And how will that indignation and resentment be expressed?

In "Catholic" circles the statement is constantly heard that these are matters solely for the bishops and clergy and that the laity have no part in their determination; but "Catholics" should be reminded that such is not the law of this Church, and that they have not yet reached the goal of their movement, union with Rome.

Another phase of the controversy which has presented itself is that the protest against this Romanizing movement is beginning to assume such proportions that "Catholics" have become fearful of their ability to secure passage of the resolution to drop the Articles of Religion. What then? The suggestion has been advanced that the Articles be left in the Book, but with an "explanatory" note to the effect that they are printed in it merely as "information", and are not binding on either clergy or laity! "Information" of what? What use is to be made of the "information"?

Such a subterfuge is too thhinly veiled to hide its true purpose from any thinking Protestant Episcopalian. Patently, its effect would be a complete elimination of the Articles from the doctrinal law of the Church. The idea is, of course, that Protestant Episcopalians would be placated by finding the Articles left in the Book, but would fail to observe that they had been robbed of their force by the "explanatory" note.

How strange it seems that in this twentieth century Protestant Episcopalians must again fight battles won four centuries ago, but such is the fact.

No compromise or evasion will settle anything.

The "Catholic" party has thrown down the gage of conflict, and the next General Convention next October will determine whether our Protestant Episcopal heritage is to be preserved to us or whether a "requiem high mass" is to be sung over the remains of that which was bought with the blood and treasure of those who suffered and died that we might be spiritually free.

Will we be true to the trust our forefathers solemnly committed to our charge, or will we betray it by our apathy and indifference?

ON ETERNAL PUNISHMENT.

Mr. Editor:

As an earnest friend of the Southern Churchman, may I respectfully protest against a certain teaching which you are permitting in your columns.

It is that gruesome doctrine inherited from the "dark ages", viz., everlasting torment.

This doctrine is repugnant to the Gospel of Christ. He taught conditional immortality. With Him hell was comparable to the garbage dump outside of Jerusalem, in the Valley of Hinnom. There the worm and fire were continuous, but the garbage was annihilated. Likewise the wicked are annihilated, as Jesus teaches in St. Matthew 10:28: "Fear Him, Who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell."

Again, that wonderful epitome of the Gospel—St. John 3:16—makes "perish" the alternative to eternal life. Moreover, in his first Epistle—5:12—St. John declares: "He that hath the Son, hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life."

The beloved disciple, in Rev. 20:14-15, depicts the final cleansing of creation by the complete annihilation of all God's enemies.

Hence we conclude that everlasting punishment does not mean everlasting pain, but rather everlasting exclusion from heaven.

(Signed) James L. Smiley.

Annapolis, Md.

Dear Mr. Smiley:

Yours of the 19th received and I am disposed to agree with you as to the everlasting, burning fire in hell for those who have neglected to embrace so great a salvation as that offered by Christ, our Redeemer.

Whilst the burning of the wicked in hell throughout eternity would be very aggressive punishment, I think our Guide Book, the Bible, calls on us to believe there is eternal punishment, although, in my opinion, this eternal punishment may not be a physical fire, but the wicked are however bound for the "hell' a time" forever and forever. It is not necessary to salvation to believe that this eternal punishment is an everlasting, physical fire, because, as you say, exclusion from heaven, and the consequent separation from God and our loved ones who have reached heaven, would be sufficient punishment to gratify all reasonable interpretation of the word "punishment" described in the Bible.

You recall that passage which reads: "The wages of sin is death and the gift of God is eternal life," but "Glory be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ".

It is not clear to my mind what is the exact nature of the eternal punishment to be meted out to sinners, and I do not think it important to know what kind of punishment. The vital matter is that we know all sinners will be eternally punished, and those who pass out of this world not trusting in their own merits, but in the merits of Jesus Christ, their Saviour, are going to be rewarded by Eternal Life.

"There is a fountain filled with blood,
Drawn from Emanuel's veins,
And sinners plunged beneath that flood
Lose all their guilty stains."

Yours truly,
Langbourne M. Williams,
President.

National Council Meeting.

Three major matters considered by the National Council at its regular meeting on December 14 and 15 were the disposition of the Children's Lenten Offering, the status of the Woman's Auxiliary, and the adjustment of quotas.

There has been a general demand in the Church that the Lenten Offering of the children should be devoted exclusively to missionary work, and not be subject to the division of funds as between the diocese and the General Church, which is the almost universal custom today. The Department of Religious Education brought in the following resolution, which was adopted by the Council:

Resolved, That the Children's Lenten Offering throughout the Church should be an offering designated for the general work of the Church and not for diocesan or parochial work, and that all moneys secured through the Lenten Offering should be remitted undivided to the Treasurer of the National Council.

At the October meeting of the Department of Missions a resolution was introduced by the Bishop of Washington, asking that this Department through the National Council should give a word of assurance to the Woman's Auxiliary that the work of the Auxiliary should go forward unimpaired and unhindered. This resolution was referred without discussion to the National Council, and by it was referred, together with much correspondence which had been received on this question, to a special committee composed of Bishop Burleson, the Rev. Dr. W. H. Milton, Mr. Richard I. Manning, and Miss Grace Lindley, executive secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary. This committee reported at this meeting of the Council; the report was unanimously adopted, and was ordered printed.

General Convention of 1925 authorized the Presiding Bishop to appoint a committee of one bishop, one presbyter and three laymen to consider the advisability and possibility of a revision of the basis and percentages of apportionment, looking toward the fairest possible distribution of responsibility for the General Church Program, this committee to report to the National Council. The committee was composed of Bishop Slattery, Chairman; the Rev. B. H. Reinheimer, Messrs. Reynolds D. Brown, Frank G. Merrill and Arthur Boehm.

Bishop Slattery presented this report in person. It was placed in the hands of the following special committee of the Council for careful consideration: Bishop Reese of Georgia, Bishop Garland, the Rev. Dr. G. S. Stewart, the Rev. Dr. W. H. Milton, Dr. Franklin, Mr. Patten, Mr. Peterkin.

The General Convention Committee recommended that the basis for determining the diocesan quotas be a flat rate on the total of current parochial expenses, instead of the percentage basis on a sliding scale at present in vogue, which was adopted by General Convention of 1922.

The special committee appointed by the Council reported that while recognizing the difficulties now existing in certain dioceses concerning quotas, it was not prepared to suggest any change in the present plan of apportionment, and recommended that the quotas for the coming triennium be fixed upon the same basis and scale as heretofore. As the debate progressed it developed that under the flat rate plan the quotas of twelve of the large dioceses would be reduced while that of all of the seventy-five other dioceses would be increased. This was the dominant factor in the ultimate defeat of the proposed flat rate as against the sliding scale now in use. After a very general debate on the question, the resolution of the National Council Committee was adopted.

The National Council Committee recommends the adoption of the other resolutions contained in the General Convention Committee's report, as follows:

1. That the items in the first schedule of the Standard Annual Parochial Report Blanks under the head of disbursements be itemized and defined, in accordance with a schedule submitted by the committee; and

2. That the Board of Church Finance be requested to add a third page, made detachable by perforation, to the Standard Parochial Report Blank, furnishing a table for reporting the items to be used in calculating the Quotas, as itemized in the above suggestion; and

3. Recommending that the Board of Church Finance be requested to provide space on the Standard Annual Parochial Report Blank for reporting the name and address of the Parish Mission Treasurer.

Bethlehem Throng Acclaims Nativity.

Bethlehem, Judea, December 24 (The Associated Press).—The anniversary of the Birth of Jesus Christ was celebrated here tonight by devout Christians from all over the world on the very spot of the Nativity.

For weeks the followers of Jesus have been converging on this little town in the hills of Judea, and tonight a great multitude gathered under the open, starlit sky outside the village in the very field where the shepherds watched their flocks on that eventful night.

Christmas carols, sung there by an English choir from Jerusalem, revived again in the imagination of the visiting pilgrims the scenes of that first, long-ago Christmas, the humble Hebrew maiden and her babe, the stable and the manger, the shepherds and their flocks.

The services in the Church of the Nativity, the oldest Christian Church in the world still in Christian use, started early in the evening and will continue well into Christmas Day.

Like the Church of the Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem, the outline of the Church of the Nativity is hidden by the complex of buildings over and around St. Franciscan, Aroenian and orthodox convents. There is no Protestant Church connected with the site of the Nativity.

The entrance is a door only four feet high, built purposely low enough to keep out the cattle which Mohammedan Governors in the past had no qualms about driving into the most sacred of all Christian churches.

Although the pilgrims stooped to enter, they found themselves in a spacious basillica, where on Christmas Day, 1100, the Crusader Baldwin was crowned King of Jerusalem.

The long, wide nave was soon crammed from end to end with a noisy, struggling, pushing crowd, whose ideal of behavior at the joyous festival was not one of silent solemnity.

About midnight the Patriarch, Bishops and clergy and privileged visitors, each bearing an enormous lighted candle, worked their way cautiously down the steep, narrow, slippery steps leading under the sanctuary of the church to the grotto of the Nativity.

There they knelt in homage before one of the most revered spots in the world, the spot where Jesus Christ is believed to have been born, the spot where the bewildered shepherds knelt to worship, the spot where pilgrims of many centuries have come to worship and meditate on the birth which so transformed the world.

At the spot of the Nativity is a small altar, and beneath it on the pavement is a large silver star marking the exact spot of the manger in which Christ was born. Sixteen silver lamps that are never extinguished glow over the silver star. The former manger is now a tiny chamber, a natural grotto cut in the rock. Tonight it was densely packed.

The special Christmas Gospel was sung, after which the Patriarch and Bishops fell on their hands and knees to kiss the silver altar with its Latin inscription, "Hic de Virgine Maria Jesus Christus natus est".

The final act of the enthralling ceremony was the procession of the Patriarch three times around the entire basillica, preceded by banners and processional crosses, by a double file of priests and Bishops in richly embroidered garments.

The Patriarch moved slowly on, flanked by the Governor of Jerusalem and foreign Consuls, including Oscar S. Heizer, of Iowa, American Consul, blessing the congregation, many of whom tried to kiss the hem of his vestments as he passed by.

During all this time the subdued excitement was stimulated by huge candelabra hanging ablaze with lights which were swung from side to side in the nave. The whole congregation joined in singing the great hymn of the angels: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace toward men of good will!" before filing slowly out into the still-darkened streets.—New York Times.

A Chapter a Day.

Church members throughout the country are being asked, through the Commission on Evangelism of the Federal Council, to read a chapter a day of the Gospel of Matthew during January and of John in February. More than five hundred thousand copies of the Gospels of Luke were purchased for such reading last year. Pastors, as well as the local and State Church Federations and the religious press, recognizing the intensified interest which will result in the spiritual life of the churches, are recommending this plan among their constituents. Several denominations have sent letters of endorsement to all their churches. The American Bible Society, Astor Place, New York City, is cooperating by preparing special editions of more than a million one-cent copies of the two Gospels to be used.

A New Project.

New York, December 30.—A new project undertaken by the Federal Council of the Churches through its Commission on Christian Education is announced today. It is assist parents to meet the problems of children and youth arising out of sex relationships.

The project, in which the American Social Hygiene Association is cooperating, involves the working out of materials and methods of sex education appropriate for all ages for use in the teaching program of the Churches.

As a result of conferences in a number of cities on the subject of the Church and social hygiene it is hoped that a large number of parents' study classes may be formed, using as a basis for study the new textbook."Parenthood and the Character Training of Children", written by Dr. Thomas W. Galloway, under the joint auspices of the Federal Council and the Social Hygiene Association. Dr. Galloway is associate director of the association's Division of Educational Measures.

The conferences are being addressed by Valeria H. Parker, M. D., of the Association. Such meetings have already been held in St. Louis, Chicago, Cleveland, Philadelphia, Rochester, Brooklyn and New York, and are planned for Boston, Buffalo, Detroit, Milwaukee, Minneapolis and other cities.

Explaining the need of this emphasis in the churches' program of education Dr. Benjamin S. Winchester, secretary of the Federal Council's Commission, said:

"It is a surprising fact that the members of our Churches, the very people who are most concerned with the preservation of the home and the building up of wholesome relations between the sexes, should have been so hesitant in adopting constructive programs of sex-education. Such programs are indispensable to the development of lofty ideals in youth and their intelligent understanding of some of their most pressing problems. While the Church delays, sensational newspapers and motion pictures, and unsupervised relationships on playground and the street, are all the time making boys and girls acquainted with the abnormalities and perversions of sex. How are they to receive right information and be trained in wholesome attitudes if the Church does not help the parents wisely to fulfil their responsibility?"

In Bible Lands Today.

A Golden Rule Sunday offering of $65, contributed by boys formerly in Near East Relief Orphanages in Palestine, but now earning their own living, has been sent to aid flood sufferers in the Mississippi Valley and in New England.

At Leninakan, Armenia, several hundred guests ate a Golden Rule Sunday dinner with the 8,000 orphans still in the care of Near East Relief. These included representatives of the government and other prominent organizations. On Sunday evening the government officials invited the American Relief Workers to a dinner in their honor and announced gifts "to assist homeless children in any area under the direction of Near East Relief". These gifts included five hundred roubles from one organization, 1,500 from another and 3,000 from another. All officials showed a spirit of hearty cooperation and appreciation of the services of the American Relief Workers in their country.

The services of Miss Alice Carr, a nurse who has been for the past four years connected with Near East Relief, has been loaned by that organization to Turkey, and is now supervising Public Health work in Smyrna. She reports that one clinic shows a reduction in infant mortality from seventy per cent to one per cent. Miss Carr is the first Public Health nurse in Turkey.

Hagop Mardrosian, an orphan boy artist from the Juniyeh Orphanage of Near East Relief, now twenty years old, has been entrusted with the task of completing the work of his master, a famous Italian painter, in the Cathedral at Tripoli, Syria. The work was left incomplete by the painter's failing health, thirty-six of the sixty large paintings in the cathedral are the work of the boy's brush, and at the end of a year and a half he has been granted a certificate of honor for the excellent work, by the Trustees of the Church.

Seventeen girls, graduated the past summer from the sewing school of the Tiflis Orphanage, were granted certificates of proficiency in making measurements, cutting, fitting and completing garments, when examined by the Commissariat of Education and representatives of the Dress Makers Union of Georgia. One was selected as a teacher for the government trade school, and another for the Tiflis public school. All others have been provided work sufficient to earn a living.

WESTERN NEBRASKA.

Rt. Rev. Geo. A. Beecher, D. D., Bishop.

Unusual Confirmation.

Bishop Beecher in his journal of October 21, says: "This is the first opportunity I have had in many years to call upon our people in their homes in this rural district, St. Mary's Church, in Holly, twelve miles north of Rushville.

"Seventy-five people were present at the service held at St. Mary's Friday evening. There being no minister the two candidates for Confirmation were presented by the whole congregation, who read the words of the presentation in concert.

"Reverend Father in God we present unto you these persons to receive the laying on of hands."

"There is a wonderful opportunity for our Church in this community; I am hoping and praying for a suitable man who will see this opportunity and take a little interest in the work."

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop Jett a Phi Beta Kappa.

The Rt. Rev. Robert Carter Jett, D. D., was one of a class of five persons initiated as honorary members of the Phi Beta Kappa fraternity at the College of William and Mary at Williamsburg, Virginia, on the evening of Monday, December 5. Dr. Albert Shaw editor of the "Review of Reviews", was the presiding officer at the meeting, which was held in the new Phi Beta Kappa hall at Williamsburg. The others receiving honorary membership were the Rev. Dr. Charles J. Smith, President of Roanoke College at Salem, Virginia; Mr. Otto H. Kahn, of New York; Mr. Frederick D. Scott, of Richmond, and Miss Cornelia Adair, President of the National Educational Association.

Christmas Offering For Advance Work.

In this diocese the Program for 1928, laid before the congregations to be subscribed in the Every Member Canvass this fall, consisted only of the diocesan budget of $50,425, and the budget quota of $15,300 for the General Church; making a total program of $65,725. Sufficient figures have not yet been received from the various churches to indicate how well the program has been pledged.

Inasmuch as the program included no provision for Advance Work in the Diocesan or General Church mission work, the churches have been asked, through their respective vestries, to devote their Christmas offerings to this purpose. In the fall of 1926 the Bishop and Executive Board made a similar request for the churches, with the result that $942.88 was given at Christmas for Advance Work. This was forwarded by the parish treasurers to the diocesan treasurer and was divided between the General Church and the diocese in the proportions of twenty-five and seventy-five per cent, respectively; this being practically the proportion between the General Church Budget Quota and the budget of the diocese itself.

At its session last May the Council of the diocese went on record as heartily approving the appeal made by the Bishop and Board in 1926 and recommended that the devotion of the Christmas offerings to Advance Work become an annual custom in this diocese.

Rev. J. R. Ellis Goes to the Diocese of Virginia.

Effective December 31, the Rev. Josiah Richard Ellis has resigned the charge of St. Luke's Church at Pedlar Mills, Amherst County, in the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia. He will probably become rector of one or more churches near Richmond. This move became necessary in order that Mr. Ellis might be near his wife who has been ill for some time past and must be under the care of physicians in Richmond for an indefinite period. Mr. Ellis' address for the present at least is 1016 West Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.

Mr. Ellis is a native of Amherst County and has numbers of relatives there. He has resided at Pedlar Mills and had charge of the church there since April, 1921. During a large part of this time he also served at Trinity Church at Boonesboro, near Lynchburg, and at Ivy Chapel. These two churches are located in Bedford County.

The affection of many friends in Southwestern Virginia goes with Mr. Ellis to his new field, and the earnest hope that Mrs. Ellis may rapidly recover her health and strength.

The Bishop Goes Abroad.

The Bishop and Mrs. Jett are planning to sail from New York in the middle of January for a cruise in the Mediterranean, after which they expect to visit the Holy Land, Italy, France and England and perhaps Switzerland and Germany. The trip was made possible through the generosity of a friend and will probably extend over a period of about three months.

Bishop Davenport of the Diocese of Easton and Bishop Thomson of Southern Virginia have kindly consented to make several visitations to churches in this diocese for confirmation during Bishop Jett's absence. Persons desiring to communicate with the Ecclesiastical Authority of the Diocese will address the Rev. Thomas D. Lewis, D. D., Amherst, Virginia, President of the Standing Committee. Matters relating to the routine work of the diocese, its finances, the activities of the Executive Board and its various departments, etc., should be addressed to Mr. Thomas A. Scott, Executive Secretary and Treasurer, Box 1068, Roanoke, Va., who will see that they receive proper attention and, as occasion requires, will take them up with the Board.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

Conference at Garden City.

The conference of Bishop Stires and his clergy at Garden City on November 21 was well attended. Holy Communion was celebrated in the Cathedral, after which the clergy assembled in the crypt. The Bishop reviewed the two years that have passed since his consecration, and enumerated three important achievements. First he ranked the large increase of missionary giving for the diocesan and national program. Long Island, the Bishop declared, is attempting to take its rightful place in the American Church. Secondly, he dwelt upon the loyal support that was given to the Bishops' Crusade, and the spiritual blessings that had come upon the diocese as a result of that whole-hearted effort. Third, and only lately completed, was the great campaign for one million dollars to build a new and larger St. John's Hospital —a real translation of the love of God into the service of men. Not only in respect of the amount of money raised, the total has now gone to $1,125,000, but in the great number of contributions secured, upwards of 12,000, and in the extent of cooperation attained throughout the diocese, this had been a great achievement.

Joy and Sorrow at Bay Shore.

The formal opening of the new parish house of St. Peter's, Bay Shore, an occasion of real rejoicing for all the parish, was turned into tragedy and bereavement by the sudden death of Mr. David Gardiner, chairman of the Building Committee. The handsome auditorium of the new building was filled with joyful parishioners, Friday evening, November 18, the keys had been formally handed over to the rector, and Mr. Gardiner had begun an address. Suddenly he put his hand to his head and fell back into a chair. Those near by hurried to his relief, two physicians present came to his help, and he was carried into an adjoining room. The rector attempted to continue the ceremonies; but shortly word came that Mr. Gardiner was dead. The people stood while prayers were offered, and then sorrowfully dispersed.

Mr. Gardiner was a member of an old Long Island family, being descended from the Colonial proprietors of Gardiner's Island, which lies between the two prongs of the eastern end of Long Island. His home, on the Montauk Road just west of Bay Shore, was a fine old farm house in which General Washington was entertained over night when he made a tour of Long Island during his presidency. The room in which Washington slept still contains the furniture which was in it then, and other rooms have many colonial furnishings and utensils, all of which Mr. Gardiner used to show to guests with much pleasure. He was unmarried, and lived with his sister, Miss Sarah Gardiner. In his death not only the parish at Bay Shore, but the diocese as well loses a valuable member.

St. Clement's, Brooklyn, to Be Sold.

Recent newspaper articles, somewhat premature and only partially correct, make it expedient to state the real situation with regard to the property of St. Clement's Church, Brooklyn. Diocesan authorities give the fact as follows. The Borough President recently secured the approval of the Board of Aldermen to the purchase by the city of the realty of St. Clement's Church, a fine location on the northeast corner of Pennsylvania and Liberty Avenues, as a site for a needed courthouse. The city will save a good sum by the opportunity to purchase without condemnation proceedings, the price of $50,000 having been agreed upon. The legal procedure is not yet complete, and title has not passed.

St. Clement's was closed July 1, 1927, and no services have been held there since that date. The parish had had a very difficult existence for several years past. Finally a careful study of the situation under the direction of the Bishop was decided upon, and this study was made by the Rev. Arthur H. Mellen, and continued for six months. At the end of that time it seemed wise to close the church. A careful effort was made to transfer every remaining parishioner to some other parish. If the sale now under consideration is completed, it will be to the advantage of both the city and the Church.

Lay Readers' School.

The first term of the Lay Readers' School was recently completed, and the students were recommended to the Bishop for his license. At the conclusion of the sessions, the Bishop, the faculty and the students dined together, and the Bishop disclosed his plans for the use of these men. They will receive their diplomas and the licenses at a meeting of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew to be held December 5, at the Church of the Resurrection, Richmond Hill. The next class will be received in February.

Remarkable Advance in Missionary Giving.

The Church of the Epiphany, Brooklyn, shows unusual advance in support of the Program. In 1925 its quota was $300, and was met. In 1926 the quota was advanced to $646, and was met. In 1927 the quota of $1,552 was given, and this has been met already, and will be exceeded. The quota of $1,771 for 1928 has been accepted with enthusiasm.

The parish is by no means without problems of its own. The congregation is too large for the Church, and a serious building program must soon be undertaken, for the Church School is also sadly in need of additional space. The Rev. Lauriston Castleman has been rector not quite two years.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

The annual dinner meeting of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in this Diocese was held on Monday evening, December 5, at the Church of the Resurrection, Richmond Hill. The rector of this parish, the Rev. Arthur R. Cummings, M. A., is Diocesan chaplain to the Brotherhood. Mr. Leon Palmer, author of the well-known book, "The Ministry of Laymen", spoke at the first assembly. Immediately after dinner a service was held in church, beginning with a modified evensong. The ten graduates of the Lay Readers' School were called by name from their seats in the choir and stood, vested in cassock and cotta, before the Bishop, who complimented them on their loyalty in volunteering for this service, their faithfulness in perusing the course of study and exercise laid out for them, and their readiness to give their service now as lay readers. Some of them are at work in their own parishes; some of them will undertake pioneer missionary work in newer places in the Diocese. The next term of the school will begin in January, and six candidates are already enrolled.

Corner-Stone Laid at Woodhaven.

The corner-stone of the new St. Matthew's Church, Woodhaven (Rev. Francis V. Baer, rector), was laid on November 26 by the Rt. Rev. Ernest M. Stires, D. D. Pilgrim Commandery, Knights Templar, of Richmond Hill, assisted in the ceremony.

Diocesan News.

Two groups of clergy in this dioceses have developed a plan for meeting their own spiritual needs and obtaining help from each other in frank discussion of specific personal problems and in united intercessions for each and for the Church. It may be that other clergy, elsewhere, will find valuable suggestion in an account of it.

One group, composed of clergymen whose parishes are contiguous to Jamaica, meets for Holy Communion in Grace Church, Jamaica, every Thursday morning at seven. In the Eucharist special intercessions are made upon request. At breakfast silence is kept while a devotional book is read. After breakfast there is a presentation of a problem or difficulty, alternating weekly with meditation or an exegesis. The attendance varies from five to ten.

Another group, comprising the clergy of parishes in the neighborhood of Lynbrook, meets on Wednesday mornings at eight in Christ Church, Lynbrook. The program is somewhat similar, except that a half hour after breakfast is given to intercessions for the Church. Attendance in Lynbrook has been as high as twenty. One of the October meetings was lengthened out into a day's retreat, one of the group conducting it. At a November meeting Bishop Stires presided. Careful effort is made to exclude every form of propaganda. The breakfast readings are from books not less than one hundred years old, guaranteeing material of proved value and free from the bias of any present-day school or party; and each man celebrates in turn, in the manner to which he is accustomed, and conducts the intercessions in his own method. Another's day retreat is planned to be held shortly before Lent.

In each of these groups the clergy are finding great spiritual value in doing the thing they are constantly urging their people to do—to go to Church to pray and to seek spiritual enlightenment and strength. These meetings are entirely apart from the fixed time and places of public worship, and the necessary fulfillment of professional duty in their own churches. The fact that one of these groups has continued its weekly meetings without interruption for eight months shows that real value has been found.

Christ Church, Bay Ridge, Brooklyn, has just received payment of a legacy of $10,000 from the estate of Mr. James Warren Lane, who died a few months ago.

MICHIGAN.

Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop.

Centennial.

On December 4 was held the celebration of 100 years of work carried on at St. Andrew's Church, Ann Arbor. An interesting feature of the celebration was the musical service under the direction of Mr. R. A. Kempf, organist and choir director at St. Andrew's for thirty years. St. Andrew's owes its origin to the efforts of the Rev. Richard F. Cadle, one of the pioneer missionaries of Michigan. The present day interests of St. Andrew's, once a tiny mission in a remote country village, is that it represents the Episcopal Church in the great university town of Ann Arbor. Through its rector, the Rev. Henry Lewis, it seeks to minister to over 800 Episcopal students.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D. Bishop.

Washington, D. C.: Bishop Darlington, of Harrisburg, made the opening address and prayer at the great Temperance Convention of the Anti-Saloon League held in the Mayflower Hotel Hall, Washington, D. C., on December 5. The Bishop attended as the representative of the Governor of Pennsylvania. The Rev. George W. Atkinson, D. D., rector of St. James' Parish, Washington, acted as the Bishop's Chaplain Lancaster, Pa.: A number of improvements have been made to the property of Yeates School, the diocesan boarding school for boys, said to be the oldest Church boarding school in the country. On Thursday, December 15, Lord Dunsany's "Golden Doom" was presented with full costume. An exhibition of the gymnastic work of the school was also given. The enrollment is steadily growing, and from all indications, the school has taken on a new lease on life and sustain its former fine traditions for scholarship, manliness and refinement.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. W. A. Guerry, D. D., Bishop.

Parish House Cornerstone.

Following the morning service at St. Philip's Church, Charleston, on a recent Sunday, a brief ceremony, during which the cornerstone of the new parish house was laid, was held on the playground at the north of the church building.

Led by the clergy and the vested choir, the congregation proceeded to the site prepared for the service. The invocation and benediction were asked by the Rev. S. Cary Beckwith, rector of the church. Following the impressive rendering of a hymn, records pertaining to the new building were placed in a copper box and sealed in the cornerstone.

The new building was started las spring. It will be finished and read for use in the spring of 1928. It an adaption of an old building, corner of Church and Cumberland Streets, which wwas purchased by the congregation. Plans were prepared by Simons and Lapham, architects, in such a way that there will be ample space for all departments.—Charleston Post.

ARKANSAS.

Rt. Rev. Jas. R. Winchester, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. W. Saphore, D. D., Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. E. T. Demby, D. D., Suffragan.

Meeting of Standing Committee.

The Standing Committee of the Diocese held a meeting in the City of Little Rock last week and passed a resolution granting to Bishop James R. Winchester a continued and indefinite leave of absence, and further relief from all diocesan duties. This was done on advice of the Bishop's physicians; and he will abide entirely by their advice.

Also a resolution was passed changing the date for the meeting of the next Diocesan Convention from the last week in April until the first week in May. This change will enable the convention to avail itself of the privilege of having the Presiding Bishop to attend its sessions.

The Bishop has gone to El Paso, Texas, for an indefinite stay. He is making fine progress towards recovery.

Bishop Winchester has appointed the Rt. Rev. Edwin M. Saphore, the Suffragan-Bishop to exercise Diocesan Authority and to perform all episcopal functions during his absence.

The Aannual Canvass.

The Every Member Annual Canvass is being carried out in practically all of the parishes of the diocese. Some of the parishes are agreeably surprised at the results, especially those that had not conducted a canvass before.

Rt. Rev F. R. Graves, D. D., Bishop.

Consecration Service.

The Service for the Consecration of Archdeacon Ding to be Assistant Bishop of Fukien, took place November 1, at All Saints' Church, Shanghai. It was an inspiring occasion. With nine Bishops and more than forty other clergy present, the strength of the Church in this part of China was remarkably illustrated. The sermon, by Bishop Molony, of Chekiang, dwelt upon the spiritual gifts demanded for the exercise of the office of a Bishop. At the dinner following the service there were a number of stimulating speeches by both Chinese and foreigners, among the latter of whom were Bishop Sanford and Dr. John W. Wood, who had reached Shanghai in time for this occasion.

The House of Bishops of the Chung Hua Sheng Kung Hui met during the first week of November, holding its sessions at St. John's University.

Woman's Auxiliary.

On October 27, at St. John's Pro-Cathedral, Shanghai, was held the annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese. There was the largest attendance on record, about 250 persons. The offering exceeded $1,000, which for his time of many disturbances was exceedingly good. At the church service preceding the meeting there was un-

1. Sunday. Circumcision. New Year's Day.

Collect for First Sunday After Christmas.

Almighty God, Who hast given us Thy only begotten Son to take our nature upon Him, and as at this time to be born of a pure virgin; Grant that we being regenerate and made Thy children by adoption and grace, may daily be renewed by Thy Holy Spirit; through the same Our Lord Jesus Christ Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the same Spirit ever, one God, world without end. Amen.

Collect for the Circumcision of Christ.

Almighty God, Who madest Thy blessed Son to be circumcised, and obedient to the law for man; Grant us the true circumcision of the Spirit; that our hearts, and all our members, being mortified from all worldly and carnal lusts, we may in all things obey Thy blessed will; through the same, Thy Son, Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

Collect for The Epiphany.

O God, Who by the leading of a star did manifest The only begotten Son to the Gentiles, mercifully grant that we, who know Thee now by faith, may after his life have the fruition of Thy glorious Godhead, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Star-Followers.

Grace Louise Robinson.

Shepherd-souled, they watch and ward
Gentle lambkins far afield.
True-of-heart, their task is sealed,
Lightened with a nascent star.
Humble hearers of choirs divine,
Follow they softly to beckoning shine.

Wise-of-heart and rich with lore
Kingly travelers ride in haste,
Trysting through an Eastern waste.
Hope-inspired they cross the wild;
Vision-blest they see the Child.

Still life's watches are stirred with song.
Now, as ever, the humble hear
Carols sweet that conquer fear.
Still Epiphany gladdens the wise.
Sons of men, aye, see the star,
Followers all to the Babe afar.

When Two Worlds Met.

This old world of ours was a cruel, cold, hard place on the morning of the first Christmas. Rome held it in her grasp. From the Irish Sea to the Caspian it stretched in power. The bones of her young soldiers lay bleaching on a thousand battlefields. It was built by blood, pillage and ruthless power.

People could believe or not whatever they pleased. They could worship one god, or a temple full of gods. Under no conditions were the citizens allowed to interfere with one another's religion. Sometimes men fancied their gods had insulted them. It was not uncommon for them to imagine their gods had a grievance against them.

Emperor Tiberius remarked, on a memorable occasion, "If the gods think that they have a grievance, they can surely take care of themselves". Is it any wonder fear reigned everywhere?

As it always happens, women and little children suffer most where there is no protecting God.

Cities were full of imported and domestic religions and slaves. Free feeds, bloody fights in the amphitheatres kept the crowds quiet. We read of a Roman matron ordering a female slave to be lashed and put to death because she placed a tress of hair in the wrong place. "What!" she exclaimed, when a protest was made, "has a slave a soul?"

Child life, as we know that expression, had not been born. Ancient writers have nothing to say about children. Even the boyhood of Jesus is not known to us.

Imagine a world without children's voices singing hymns and carols, generations who had never heard of a babe born in a stable and laid in a manger, never watched a Christmas tree, never saw a Santa Claus, never received a gift, homes with no sand man creeping up the stairs to interrupt the mother's bedtime stories, twilight without evening bells, vesper songs and little children robed in white kneeling by mother's knee, lisping:

"Gentle Jesus, meek and mild,
Look upon a little child."

It was a hard world. The poor were oppressed and had few friends. Individuals counted for little or nothing. The nation was everything. Freedom, there was none. Human life was cheap. Hunger was common. Tenements reeked with miserable families. Prisons were full. Superstitions were rife. Redress for wrong unknown. Education was scanty. Men lived in fear and died in terror. The world was very old, and the human race very tired.

Israel's religion had hardened into a cold formalism. For four hundred years no prophet had spoken. No Psalmist had burst into song, singing, "Glory to God in the highest". Men's hearts had grown weary. Their eyes were dimmed. Hope had faded out, and there was no vision in the land of Israel. The devout cried, "Where is the promise of His coming"?

But, as always, another world is working for the welfare of this one. St. Luke would bid us have our eyes and ears open for this higher realm of activity. He would have us open our eyes to behold the God of Eternal Compassion keeping watch and ward over His own.

The Lord God of Israel was wakeful. He saw the confusion, wickedness, cruelty and godlessness, and was working for the redemption of mankind.

Into this proud, pushing world, with its greed, strife and nameless fears, an angel winged his quiet flight, under the peaceful stars, on an errand of mercy and stood before Zacharias.

"I am Gabriel that stand in the presence of God and am sent to speak unto thee, and to show thee good tidings."

Two worlds met that first Christmas, the most thrilling hour since the birth of time, when heaven and earth met. A world of simple obedience where power and pride having nothing in common, where prophets rank higher than kings, and a Saviour highest of all.

The first feet which found their way to Bethlehem were those of simple shepherds—poor men with nothing in their hands to bring, unlearned men with no powers of complex thinking, plain men with no official raiment to trail behind them. "The Angel of the Lord came upon them and the glory of the Lord shone round about them". "I thank Thee, O Father, Lord of Heaven and Earth, that Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes."

"So, at mine Inne Thy blessed Son
His lodging, Lord, shall take.
And there (much more than I have done)
Him welcome I will make.
For, not a Stable but my Breast
Shall be His lodging-Roome,
And mine own Heart to give Him rest
A Pallet shall become.

—Dr. George MacPherson Hunter, in Presbyterian Banner.

Where Is He?

The Epiphany is the time to find the Christ, to search for Him until we find Him. All the world needs Him. He alone is sufficient for the worship of the human heart, and He alone has the power to bring peace and contentment. In those other days the Wise Men asked the question, "Where is He"? We are still asking the question, "Where is He"? And we can tell you where He is. He is still walking among the children of men in tender solicitude and divine service. He is still listening to the cries of the widow and the orphan. He is still touching the broken-hearted with the fingers of love and smoothing away from their wrinkled brow the evidences of a sorrow they cannot bear alone. He is still by the side of the sinner who cries, "God be merciful to me, a sinner". And He is saying to him, "This day thy sins are forgiven thee. Go and sin no more". He is still preaching the gospel of the good way of righteousness. He is still listening to the prayers of men and answering them in the glory of His power. He is still as a divine providence overreaching the pathway of men to ward away the evil of the world. He is still with us in the shadows of the night until we break forth in song. Christ is not alone in heaven. He is in the human heart. He is knocking at the doorways of the human heart. He is listening to the cries of every child, and His strong arms are underneath age and feebleness, that they may have comfort in Him.

This world is trying to find Him in strange vicissitudes; trying to find Him in the molecule, and in the mountain, in science. And He is in all these, but the Christ you and I need is right at our elbow, waiting to minister to us out of His unfailing love the things we need to make Christmas a time to be remembered forever. And the message of this Christmas to you, my brother, may be to answer this question as in prayer you seek Christ, that you may find Him a Friend and a Saviour and a Lord. Those who have found Him have been content. So will you. There is none like Him in all the world. No heart so tender, or so true; no love so everlasting and unfailing; no power so great that it created men and the world, and yet stoops to put its arms around the lowly sinner and speak to him forgiveness.—Selected.

A New Year Dawns.

Mary Davis Reed.

Has this year brought you grief and sorrow?
A New Year dawns for you tomorrow.
Did disappointing shadows rise
To cloud the sunlight in your skies?
Did irksome duties sometimes gall;
And bitter tears too often fall?
Did worry from your soul's faith borrow?
A New Year dawns for you tomorrow.

Has this year brought you pain and sadness?
The New Year holds a store of gladness.
Your Father knows the weight of care
Which your frail strength alone can bear.
Stormclouds are edged with golden light;
Sunrise follows the darkest night;
Forget the wound, the sting, the sorrow—
A New Year dawns for you tomorrow.

Has this year brought you joy and pleasure?
The New Year holds an added measure.
God will grant peace for each new day,
And give strength for the untried way.
Safe in His love be then at rest,
Sure He will send just what is best.
His grace will bring surcease from sorrow
Throughout the year that dawns tomorrow.

Blessed Are the Quiet.

In the first letter of Paul to the Thessalonians he counsels them, "Be ambitious to be quiet". Paul does not say, "Be ambitious to be wealth". He does not advise them "to hurry up and have a good time", or "to strive to become famous". He knew the people then didn't need that advice, just as the people today do not need it. But they needed—we need—"Be ambitous to be quiet".

To say that this is an age of hurry and speed is to voice a truism, but one which is none the less true. But history seems to tell us that every age has been considered one of hurry and speed by the people of that age. It is only a hundred years ago that steam as a power of locomotion was discovered. It is only a few years ago when gasoline, electricity and such inventions as they brought into use became generally known. Yet it is only a century ago that the poet Wordsworth, when none of the things that make this twentieth century such a mad, hectic thing were in use, wrote:

"The world is too much with us; late and soon, Getting and spending, we lay waste our powers."

But we need not stop there. We go back some nineteen centuries and we find Paul advising, yea, almost commanding, the people of Thessalonica to "study to be quiet". The Gospel had come to them in such reality that they wanted to hurry here, rush there, forsake the common, every-day things of life, and all in the name of religion. Paul writes, "Make it your ambition to be quiet and to do your own work". If that advice was needful then, it is ten times as needful today. "Be ambitious to be quiet."

"Halt!
And silence falls on land and sea,
Behold, behold, a mystery."

And that mystery is life.

Some one has likened this age and its people to a yard engine, that puffs and blows, rings its bell, runs up and down, but the truth remains it never goes, never gets anywhere. Much the same thought is expressed by the life of certain birds seen on some of the eastern seas. These birds are said to be always on the wing. No one has ever seen them rest. The natives call them "lost souls", because they never are still. Are the descriptions true? Do they apply to our lives—"yard engine", "lost souls", always on the go, never arriving?

In the Book of Kings there is a story which is a wonderful commentary of present-day life. A prophet once told it to the king, for purposes of his own. The story was about a battle in which a certain prisoner was taken. The captor committed the prisoner into the prophet's care, and ordered him to guard the captive well. For a time he did, but things evidently became interesting where they were, and the prophet took a hand in the battle. But when he returned the prisoner had vanished. The excuse offered was, "As thy servant was busy here and there, he was gone". "Served you right," said the king in effect. The king, I feel, spoke the truth. "Busy here and there"—and so life escapes us.—New Outlook.

The Indian's Gift.

Away up in the north country a Christian missionary was speaking to his Indian friends of consecration.

Presently, as he spoke, an old Indian chief arose, walked forward and laid his tomahawk at the missionary's feet: "Indian Chief give his tomahawk to Jesus Christ," said he, and sat down.

Still the missionary spoke on of the love of God in Christ Jesus; of the gift of His Son for us and of His claim upon our lives. Rising from his seat the old chief walked forward once more to the front. Unwrapping his blanket from his shoulders he laid it at the preacher's feet, saying, "Indian Chief give his blanket to Jesus Christ". Again he sat down.

But still the messenger preached on concerning the love of God in Christ Still he showed how God had sent Him to earth to redeem us lost men and give Himself for us.

Presently the old chief was seen to disappear from the meeting. By and by he came leading his pony to the tent door. He tied it to the stake and again walked up the aisle. Facing the missionary, he said, "Indian Chief give this pony to Jesus Christ". Once more he took his seat. He had given about all he had—all the things he had. Have some of us, too, given things instead of ourselves?

And now as the missionary preached of the God who spared not His only Son, but freely gave Him up for us, he pressed upon his hearers the claim of Jesus Christ upon the life. Still the message kept sinking into their hearts.

And then the old Chieftain arose for the last time. He walked forward with tottering steps to the front of the tent. He kneeled down reverently before the missionary. With tears streaming down his bronzed cheeks he said, with trembling lips, "Indian Chief give himself to Jesus Christ".—Selected.

A Prayer to Live.

Mary Elizabeth Barbot.

Oh, Let me Live!
I do not ask to merely breathe,
And go through life
A looked-on, cold-eyed, afar.
But let me give
Quick tribute, as when colors seethe
In vivid strife;
Gasp at the jewel in a star;
Grow dumb before
The vista of a sunset sky
Hue-swept; adore
The dew-lined cups of roses; sigh
With eyes that smart
At the defiant red of wings
Untamed; start
At sudden loveliness that stings;
Thrill to the calls
Of saucy jays, echo the peal
Of waterfalls
That vie young laughter.
Oh, to feel! to feel!
To have my heart
Keen-tuned to every breathless strain,
And be a part
In concert with my fellow-men;
To count well-spent
What time I use, what tears I shed,
To heal some rent
As if it were my soul that bled;
To set aright
The wayward, tired foot that slips;
To hear as light
The careless dart from mocking lips
That do not mean
To wound; try hard to understand
Deeds that may seem
Not due the clasp of friendship's hand—

But these I seek.
Just tune me to be sensitive
That at life's peak
I'll be content. Lord, let me live!

A Prayer For The New Year.

Our Father, unto Thee, in the light of our Saviour's blessed Light, we would lift our souls. We thank Thee for that true Light shining in our world with still increasing brightness. We thank Thee for all who have walked therein, and especially for those near to us and dear, in whose lives we have seen this excellent glory and beauty. May we know that in the body and out of the body they are with Thee, and that when these early days come to an end, it is not that our service of Thee and one another may cease, but that it may begin anew. Make us glad in all who have faithfully lived; make us glad in all who have faithfully died. Lift us into life and love and purity and blessedness, and give us at last our portion with those who have trusted in Thee, in small things, as in great, in things temporal and things eternal, to do Thy holy will.—Amen.

An inalienable peace—beyond the reach of changing circumstance—a joy that the world could not give by its privileges nor take away by its deprivations, these were the promises of Christ to His first followers, as they stood under the shadow of the supreme tragedy. These are still our inheritance from Him, if we prove ourselves His spiritual heirs.

For the Young Folks

WHAT IS THE COMING YEAR?

It is a door,
By which we reach new fields
Of service for our God and fellowman:
A door by whihch we can Explore
Wide spheres of usefulness
Our world to bless;
And reap the sheaves, God's Word of witness yields.

It is a task
Set by the Master of our Souls,
A little part of our life's work below:
And so we ask
The holy wisdom which alone controls
Our labor, teaching what and where to sow;
That the year, at its end,
Moy show God's glory and man's profit blend.

It is a book,
With many pages and as yet all white,
On which to write
The history of thought, and deed, and word
In this new group of days.
We pray Thee, Lord,
As Thou shalt look
Upon the book, when written o'er, may all be to Thy praise.

Why Minnie Meade Went North.

A Story of Old Virginia.

Part I.

L. J. A.

"Dear me," said Miss Lizzie, "if that isn't Minnie Meade; I had almost forgotten her." She dived down to the bottom of the trunk and brought out the said Minnie, and, although she hadn't seen the light of day for many years, she did not blink an eye, but regarded her long-lost mother cheerfully and composedly.

"Law, Miss Lizzie, where did that doll come from?" said Maria, stopping her sweeping in a distant corner of the garret, arrested by the exclamation and the smiles on Miss Lizzie's flushed face.

"Oh! Maria, it's my dear Minnie Meade! I got her, let me see, it must have been the second year of the War, 1862, because I remember it was the last year at home before we left to refugee in North Carolina. That pink cambric dress and those shoes! I remember how beautiful I thought them all. I'm sorry the clothes have those ugly brown stains on them, and the underclothes trimmed with tatting,—never was a doll so beautifully dressed, I thought. But there's the bell! I wonder who it is. You had better go on with your sweeping, Maria, and get up the dust in that corner, and I'll see who is at the door."

So saying, she laid the doll back in the trunk, and casting a glance at the varied assortment piled on chairs to be looked over, descended the stairs. The slight shade of annoyance passed from her face. She remembered how her mother had never been too busy to welcome visitors; at the same time she wished her hair had been smoother and that her hands and dress had not borne such witness to her occupation.

"Good morning, Mrs. Harrison; I am so glad to see you if you will only excuse my appearance. I have Maria here today cleaning the garret."

"Dear Miss Lizzie, don't bother about that; I only stopped by to bring you some beaten biscuits and old ham. We enjoyed some last night and I thought of you."

"Isn't that like you and won't I have a delicious tea this evening? You must stop long enough to tell me what you have been doing with yourself lately."

"Why, the Rummage Sale for the Near East Orphans is occupying all my thoughts. I'm on my way to a committee meeting now. We are anxious to make it as big a thing as possible for such a little town; we don't want to have only trash. We want to have things that will bring some money, though people here can't pay big prices. It is such a splendid object."

"It certainly appeals to me," said Miss Lizzie, "and I wish I had something to give, but I can't think of a thing. Oh, I know—Minnie Meade!"

"Minnie Meade?"

"Yes; just wait a moment," and up the steps Miss Lizzie went as fast as she could. But it was some time before she reappeared and, with a little apologetic laugh, held up to view Minnie Meade, looking perhaps a little the worse for wear and the passage of years, for it tells on us all.

"Don't you think if her clothes were nicely washed she might attract a buyer? Maria will do the laundering at home; and how delighted she will be when I tell her she can put as much starch as she pleases; Maria can't be reconciled to the limpness of modern lingerie and loves to starch with a heavy hand on the slightest pretext."

"No, indeed, Miss Lizzie, I couldn't bear to think of your parting with your treasure, after having kept her all these years."

"Oh, but I want to have some share in helping those children of the Near East and I think Minnie Meade would love to help, too," she said, casting an understanding glance at Minnie's imperturbable face. "She has had a very useful life and has brought happiness to innumerable youngsters beside myself. Somehow they always love her and will leave their pretty dolls with real hair, and eyes that open and shut to play with Minnie Meade. You see she has charm. My brother's children adored her and all the children in the neighborhood considered it a great honor when I allowed them to play with her. But they are all grown up now and I think Minnie Meaade will do more good by being sold than by staying shut up in my trunk."

"But I must tell you about the Christmas I got Minnie Meade, for though it was during the War—of course, I mean 'Our War'," she said parenthetically, "it has always been a bright spot in my life."

"I was nine years old and loved my father very dearly; and I remember how I used to pray that he would be kept safe. He was with General Lee in the Army of Northern Virginia, and sometimes it was very long between letters, for it was hard to get them through the lines. Mother was so brave and kept things going as best she could. The servants were faithful and never left us but even as a little child I could see that things were going badly enough. Sugar and salt were very scarce and real money had vanished.

"As Christmas drew near I constantly gave vent to my two chief longings, that father would get home and that I would get a doll. My oldest sister's doll was almost dismembered from the affection lavished on it. Mother explained that Santa Claus would have a hard time getting through to us, and she warned us not to expect much; she was sure he wouldn't bring raisins or oranges or candy. She was mysteriously busy, however, and our expectations were not completely downed. We were much cheered by the delicious smell of molasses cooking and though Aunt Abbie, who was the best cook I ever knew, ordered us out of the kitchen, we caught sight of most delectable cakes. In some way she and mother had captured the bottom of a molasses barrel and an artistic triumph in sugarless cake had been achieved.

(To be concluded.)

The Christmas Guest.

Once upon a time, a long, long time ago, on the night before Christmas, a little child was wandering all alone through the streets of a great city. There were many people on the street, fathers and mothers, sisters and brothers, uncles and aunts, and even gray-haired grandfathers and grandmothers, all of whom were hurrying home with bundles of presents for each other and for their little ones. Fine carriages rolled by, express wagons rattled past, even old carts were pressed into service, and all things seemed in a hurry and glad with expectation of the coming Christmas morning. From some of the windows bright lights were already beginning to stream until it was almost as bright as day.

But the little child seemed to have no home, and wandered about listlessly from street to street. No one took any notice of him except perhaps Jack Frost, who bit his bare toes and made the ends of his fingers tingle. The north wind, too, seemed to notice the child, for it blew against him and pierced his ragged garments through and through, causing him to shiver with cold. Home after home he passed, looking with longing eyes through the windows in upon the glad, happy children, most of whom were helping to trim the Christmas trees for the coming morrow.

"Surely," said the child to himself, "where there is so much gladness and happiness some of it may be for me." So with timid steps he approached a large and handsome house. Through the windows he could see a tall and stately Christmas tree already lighted. Many presents were hung upon it. Its green boughs were trimmed with gold and silver ornaments. Slowly he climbed up the broad steps and gently rapped at the door. It was opened by a large man-servant. He had a kindly face, although his voice was deep and gruff. He looked at the little child for a moment, then sadly shook his head and said: "Go down off the steps. There is no room here for such as you." He looked sorry as he spoke; possibly he remembered his own little ones at home and was glad that they were not out on this cold and bitter night. Through the open door a bright light shone, and the warm air, filled with the fragrance of the Christmas pine, rushed out from the inner room and greeted the little wanderer with a kiss. As the child turned back into the cold and darkness he wondered why the footman had spoken thus, for surely, thought he, those little children would love to have another companion join them in their joyous Christmas festival. But the little children inside did not even know that he had knocked at the door.

The street grew colder and darker as the child passed on. He went sadly forward, saying to himself: "Is there no one in all this great city who will share the Christmas with me?" Farther and farther down the street he wandered, to where the homes were not so large and beautiful. There seemed to be little children inside of nearly all the houses. They were dancing and frolicking about. Christmas trees could be seen in nearly every window, with beautiful dolls and trumpets and picture books and balls and tops and other dainty toys hung upon them. In one window the child noticed a little lamb made of soft, white wool. Around its neck was tied a red ribbon. It had evidently been hung on the tree for one of the children. The little stranger stopped before the window and looked long and earnestly at the beautiful things inside, but most of all was he drawn toward the white lamb. At last, creeping up to the window-pane, he gently tapped upon it. A little girl came to the window and looked out into the dark street, where the snow had now begun to fall. She saw the child, but she was only frowned and shook her head and said: "Go away and come some other time. We are too busy to take care of you now."

Back into the dark, cold street he turned again. The wind was whirling past him and seemed to say: "Hurry on, hurry on, we have no time to stop. 'Tis Christmas Eve and everybody is in a hurry tonight."

Again and again the little child rapped softly at door or window-pane. At each place he was refused admission. One mother feared he might have some ugly disease which her darling would catch; another father said he had only enough for his own children and none to spare for beggar rats. Still another told him to go home where he belonged, and not to trouble other folks.

The hours passed; later grew the night and colder blew the wind and darker seemed the street. Farther and farther the little one wandered. There was scarcely any one left upon the street by this time, and the few who remained did not seem to see the child. Suddenly ahead of him there appeared a bright, single ray of light. It shone through the darkness into the child's eyes. He looked up smilingly and said: "I will go where the small light beckons; perhaps they will share their Christmas with me."

Hurrying past all the other houses, he soon reached the end of the street and went straight up to the window from which the light was streaming. It was a poor little low house, but the child cared not for that. The light seemed still to call him in. From what do you suppose the light came? Nothing but a tallow candle, which had been placed in an old cup with a broken handle in the window, as a glad token of Christmas Eve. There was neither curtain nor shade to the small, square window, and as the little child looked in he saw standing upon a neat, wooden table a branch of a Christmas tree. The room was plainly furnished, but it was very clean. Near the fireplace sat a lovely-faced mother with a little two-year-old on her knee and an older child beside her. The two children were looking into their mother's face and listening to a story. She must have been telling them a Christmas story, I think. A few bright coals were burning in the fireplace and all seemed light and warm within.

The little wanderer crept closer and closer to the window-panes. So sweet was the mother's face, so loving seemed the little children, that at last he took courage and tapped gently, very gently, on the door.

The mother stopped talking, the little children looked up.

"What was that, mother?" asked the little girl at her side.

"I think it was some one tapping on the door," replied the mother. "Run as quickly as you can and open it, dear, for it is a bitter cold night to keep any one waiting in this storm."

"Oh, mother, I think it was the bough of the tree tapping against the window-pane," said the little girl. "Do please go on with our story."

Again the little wanderer tapped upon the door.

"My child! my child!" exclaimed the mother, rising, "that certainly was a rap. No one must be left out in the cold on our beautiful Christmas Eve."

The child ran to the door and threw it wide open. The mother saw the ragged stranger standing without, cold and shivering, with bare head and almost bare feet. She held out both hands and drew him into the warm, bright room. "You poor, dear child!" was all she said, and putting her arms around him, she drew him close to her breast.

"He is very cold, my children," she exclaimed. "We must warm him."

"And," added the little girl, "we must love him and give him some of our Christmas, too."

"Yes," said the mother; "but first let us warm him."

The mother sat down beside the fire with the child on her lap, and her own two little ones warmed his half-frozen hands in theirs. The mother soothed his tangled curls, and bending low over his head, kissed the child's face. She gathered the three little ones in her arms, and the candle and the firelight shone over them. For a moment the room was very still.

By and by the little girl said softly to her mother: "May we not light the Christmas tree and let him see how beautiful it looks?"

"Yes," said the mother.

With that she seated the child on a low stool beside the fire and went herself to fetch the few simple ornaments which from year to year she had saved for her children's Christmas tree.

They were soon so busy that they did not notice the room had filled with a strange and brilliant light. They turned and looked at the spot where little wanderer sat. His ragged clothes had changed to garments white and beautiful; his tangled curls seemed like a halo of golden light about his head; but most glorious of all was his face, which shone with a light so dazzling that they could scarcely look upon it.

In silent wonder they gazed at the child: Their little room seemed to grow larger and larger until it was as wide as the whole world; the roof of their low house seemed to expand and rise until it reached to the sky.

With a sweet and gentle smile the wonderful child looked upon them for a moment and then slowly rose and floated through the air, above the treetops, beyond the church spire, higher even than the clouds themselves, until he appeared to them to be a shining star in the sky above. At last he disappeared from sight.

The astonished children turned in hushed awe to their mother, and said in a whisper: "Oh, mother, it was the Christ-Child, was it not?"

And the mother answered in a low tone, "Yes".—Adapted from the German by Elizabeth Harrison.

God has wonderfully used this series of ten lectures, fundamental to a clear understanding of the Bible:

1. The Jew, the Gentile and the Church of God.
2. The Seven Dispensations.
3. The Two Advents.
4. The Two Resurrections.
5. The Five Judgments.
6. Law and Grace.
7. The Believer's Two Natures.
8. The Believer's Standing and State.
9. Salvation and Rewards.
10. Believers and Professors.

God certainly gave us this little book through his servant—not added revelation but Spirit-given interpretation.

Here are a few out of many letters, showing how much this little booklet has helped.

GRYMES: Entered into rest November 28, at Orange, Va., MARY LEWIS GRYMES, daughter of the late Peyton Grymes and his wife, Katherine Catlett Grymes, of Orange, Va.

"And with the morn, those angel faces smile,
Which she has loved long since, and lost awhile."

MISS ELEANOR C. WHEAT.

On the 15th of November, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and twenty-seven, the soul of MISS ELEANOR C. WHEAT entered upon that rest that remaineth for the people of God. She had been faithful in the Church Militant here upon earth, and she was taken to the Church Triumphant on the other side. She rests from her labors and her works do follow her.

It would be difficult to estimate the value of the service which "Miss Eleanor" gave to the church and the community in which she lived. Social service in any adequately organized form was a thing unknown in the days when she began her labors among the people on the mountain near her home at Lynnwood, Rockingham county, Va., but any one who will note the change in the religious atmosphere and spiritual outlook of the people among whom she labored will be made aware that a real social service work had been undertaken and carried on under the inspiration and in the spirit of the living Christ. In this work she ever took abundant share. The writer remembers well driving with her to the humble homes of the people, she being always ready to offer for duty, undaunted by heat or cold as she went on her mission of mercy to those in need.

She seemed to be peculiarly fitted, by inheritance and training, for this difficult task to which she gave herself in such unstinted measure. Her father, the Rev. J. C. Wheat, D. D., was a man of splendid mind and devout spirit; her mother, who was Miss Elizabeth Lewis, was one of rare grace and charm of manner, with a soul rich in those virtues that make for an admirable womanhood. Miss Eleanor combined the spiritual features of both. For a number of years she taught in her father's school, and there, among the younger girls, who came from far and near, she lived and labored and drew them close to her in tender love. Wherever they are today there is she, in memory and spirit, working for the good. She was faithful indeed in the things that God had committed to her. Her relatives and friends mourn her going, but rejoice for her in the peace upon which she has entered.

St. John's University.

Though the other departments of St. John's University, Shanghai, are closed for the present, the theological department is open and work being carried on. And for this term the students formerly pursuing their theological work at Boone University, Wuchang, have been transferred to this place and the two institutions combined, with a total of fourteen men, in two classes of seven each. The Central Theological School of the Chung Hua Sheng Kung Hui, located at Nanking, has also, on account of disturbed conditions there, been temporarily removed to Shanghai, and is accommodated in the spacious quarters of St. John's University.

Military conditions have reverted to the old bald struggle for personal power. All the glow of the hopes founded upon the Nationalist pretensions of the early part of the year have faded into the light of common day, as it has become manifest that the movement differed from other militaristic enterprises in no respect except in the possession of a better catch-word. The mass of the people are disillusioned and sick at heart. Among Chinese, Hope now finds but a faint voice. The saying that great occasions call out great leaders has not been justified here. We who know where hope may be found are waiting and praying for the dawning of that day when the Sun of Righteousness shall rise upon this land with healing in His wings.

Announcement is made of the birth, in Shanghai, of a daughter to the Rev. and Mrs. L. R. Craighill, of Nanchang. Mother and child doing well.

Church General Hospital After Six Months.

By Mary Latimer James, M. D.

There is just time, before the September Newsletter goes to press, for me to rush off a few lines to give my first impressions of The Church General Hospital on my return after an absence of six months. On Monday morning, September 26, our steamer tied up at the dock in Hankow, and from the deck I looked across the broad expanse of golden water to the green hills and the smoking factory chimneys on the Wuchang side of the river.

After duly registering at the American Consulate and attending to various other necessary things, I found myself, by early afternoon, actually sailing across the Yang-tse to visit our beloved hospital. It seemed like a dream to draw up, as of old in a rickshaw at the hospital gate, and to walk once more through that archway by which I had passed out, with such a sad heart, the twenty-fifth day of last March. Although the hospital staff now knew I had finally received the necessary Consular permission to return to Hankow, there had been no opportunity to tell them that I was actually arriving in Wuchang that day. (Our telephone system still leaves something to be desired.) Hence, I walked in on them all unannounced, and saw the hospital just as it was, without any special preparation to receive me.

What I found does splendid credit to our Superintendent, Dr. Samuel Lowe, to our other Chinese doctors, to our nurses, and to all our faithful staff, who have carried the very heavy burden of this institution through these most trying months of political uncertainty, and that in the absence of all foreign members of the staff. In these dark days the Church General Hospital has witnessed, in no uncertain way, to the true spirit of Christianity. The dangers faced and the loving service rendered amid the most trying conditions show the power of Christ in these human lives. I found every one going about his or her work in a spirit of cheer that thrilled me. My heart overflowed with thankfulness that such could be the case in such days.

The struggle is by no means over yet, but surely we have ample grounds for hope since the hospital has so successfully weathered these thirteen months, beginning with the siege of Wuchang, the thirty-first of August, 1926. The professional standard is still kept high, the Nurses' Training School is still flourishing, the Men's Department, which had to be closed for about six months, is again open, and best of all—the Christian aspect of the work is in no sense lost. Religious services and personal evangelistic work continue as usual, the autumn schedule for the nurses includes Bible classes, as in the past, and the morale of the institution demonstrates the power of Christianity in concrete form. We who love the place cannot too heartily thank Dr. Lowe and the staff who have stood behind him for this good work achieved.

The Consul is still unwilling to grant us foreign members of the staff permission to live in Wuchang, so that it is but little we can do to help as yet. But we are allowed to go back and forth, and we hope that soon more settled political conditions will ease the strain somewhat. May the Church in America, as well as out here in China, stand whole-heartedly behind this one of our diocesan institutions which has been enabled, by God's mercy, to weather the storm.

UTAH.

Rt. Rev. A. W. Moulton, D. D., Bishop.

A Trip to the Uintah Indian Reservation.

The Bishop of Utah with Archdeacon Bulkley and Mr. Frank Gregory, of the Emory University House in Salt Lake City, made a trip to the Uintah Indian Reservation in November. A drive that has been accomplished in five hours took twelve, on account of almost impossible muddy roads.

On Sunday morning at Whiterocks, where the Rev. Stirling Talbot is in charge of St. Elizabeth's Mission, Bishop Moulton baptized five and confirmed twenty-seven Indians. At Randlett, over a hundred miles from the railway, where there is practically nothing but sand, sage-brush and mountains, the Archdeacon baptized twenty-three persons, nearly all adult Indians, and the Bishop then confirmed thirty-four, twenty-four being Indians.

At Roosevelt, the Rev. H. J. Johnson presented a confirmation class of ten. In all, twenty-eight were baptized and seventy-two confirmed this day.

"May Their Kind Increase."

At Carson City, the Rev. M. J. Hersey has painted the church and rectory, doing most of the work himself. The whole block, which is all Church property, has been renovated, fences taken down and the lawns placed in first-class shape, with flower beds well cared for, all about, and new porches built on the rectory. He has made such marked improvements that the newspapers have had several articles about it and are now advertising it as one of the showplaces of Carson City. "There are still some of these men in the Church who can and do work with their hands, beautifying the Church's property as well as training the minds of their people. May their kind increase!" says the Archdeacon.

Is it Worth While?

Is it worth while with life's fierce storms to wrestle,
To face and fight he driving wind and rain;
To stretch and strain each bone and nerve and muscle
O'er flaunting foes a victory to gain—
Is it worth while?
Is it worth while the steep ascent of heaven,
To climb with aching limbs and weary feet,
My hope and duty ever onward driven,
Deaf to the siren, Ease, with songs so sweet—
Is it worth while?

Is it worth while to sow beside all waters
The precious seeds of faith and hope and love,
To rest not till earth's many sons and daughters,
By righteous fruits make glad ever ever heaven above—
Is it worth while?

O gracious Christ, at Thy dear feet low falling,
In Thy dear wounds our trembling hands we press,
And Thee our pattern and our Lord now call,
We lose the doubts our hearts at times confess—
Is it worth while?

For Thou didst bravely give Thy life for others,
Didst bear the cross and walk the way of shame;
So naught for men whom Thou didst call Thy brothers
Should daunt the hearts that bear Thy blessed Name—
Is it worth while?
